17. ——— Property held on trust—Assignment by trustees—Limitation. In 1870 the purchasers and recorded proprietors of a four-biswas share of a certain village caused a statement to be recorded in the village record-of-rights to the effect that B claimed to be the proprietor of a moiety of such share, and that they were willing to admit his right whenever he paid them a moiety of the sum which they had paid in respect of the arrears of revenue due on such share. In 1843 M purchased such share and became its recorded proprietor. In 1877 K, the son of B, sued the representative of M for possession of a moiety of such share, alleging, with reference to the statement recorded in the record-of-rights, that such moiety had vested in M's assignors in trust to surrender it to B or his heirs on payment of a moiety of the sum they had paid on account of revenue, and paying into Court a moiety of such sum. Held, that that statement could not be regarded as evidence of the alleged trust, and that, assuming that the alleged trust existed, the suit was barred by limitation, M having purchased without notice of the trust and for valuable consideration. The only evidence of the custom was a provision in a wajib-ul-urz that the share of a person who absconded should be held in trust for him for twelve years only. Held, that, as the father of the plaintiffs did not reclaim his share within twelve years, the plaintiffs' right was forfeited. Where a village administration-paper provided for the surrender to certain absent shareholders on their return to the village of the lands formally held by them, but did not contain any declaration of a trust as existing between such absent shareholders and the occupiers of their lands at the time such administration-paper was framed:—Held, that the administration-paper could not be regarded as evidence of a pre-existing trust between such persons, nor as an admission of such a trust by such occupiers. 22. ——————— Absent co-sharer—Waijb-ul-urz. S and his brother owned an 8 annas share of a village, and H and D owned the other 8 annas share, the parties being related to each other by blood. In 1865 (Sambat 1921), at the settlement of the village, the following statement was recorded by the settlement officer in the wajib-ul-urz at the instance of H and D, with whom the settlement was made, S and his brother being absent from the village and having been absent for some ten years: "We, H and D, are equal sharers of one 8 annas and S and (his brother) of the other 8 annas in the village according to descent: ten years ago S and (his brother) went away into Orai; their present residence is not known: they have not left woman, child, or heir of any kind in the village: on that account the entire 16 annas of the village are in possession of us, H and D. At the time of the preparation of the khewat we made a gift of 4 annas of our own eight annas to P, and have given him possession of 4 annas of the 8 annas belonging to S and (his brother), keeping the remaining 4 annas in our own possession: when S and (his brother) return to the village, we three, who are in possession shall give up the 8 annas share of the aforesaid persons." In March 1880 S sued P for possession of the 4 annas mentioned in the wajib-ul-urz as having been made over to him by H and D out of the 8 annas share belonging to S and his brother. He based his suit upon the wajib-ul-urz, but did not expressly state that the share in suit had been entrusted to H and D on the understanding that it should be returned to him when he reclaimed it. The lower Appellate Court dismissed the suit as barred by limitation, on the ground that P's possession of the share in suit became adverse in 1866 or 1867, more than twelve years before the institution of the suit, when S, having returned to the village, had claimed the share and P had refused to surrender it. On second appeal it was contended by S that under the terms of the wajib-ul-urz P's possession was that of a trustee, and his possession could not be held to be adverse. Per SPANKIE, J.—That inasmuch as there was no direct evidence that the share in suit had been entrusted by S to H and D on the understanding that it should be returned to him when he reclaimed it, and as such a trust could not be implied from the terms of the wajib-ul-urz, which amounted to nothing more than an acknowledgment of S's title and an offer to surrender possession when he returned, and as when he did return in 1866 or 1867 P refused to surrender possession, S was bound to have sued to recover the share in suit within twelve years from the date of such refusal, and as he had failed to do so, the suit was barred by limitation. Per PEARSON, J.—That although no mention was made in the wajib-ul-urz of such a trust as was contended for, yet the terms of that document strongly suggested the creation of such a trust. Having regard to the terms of the wajib-ul-urz, and to the fact that S and his brother were not strangers to H and D, nor merely co-shares, but near blood-relations, probably residing together on the same premises and partners in agricultural labours, further inquiry should be made with the view of elucidating the nature of the acquisition of H and D of the share and of their subsequent possession. 26. ——— Statute of Frauds —Stat. 29 Car. II, c. 3. The plaintiff, who was the widow of G, sued the defendant, the executrix of J, to recover a sum of R7,394-9-6, part of the purchase-money of a house which had been sold by J in his lifetime, and which the plaintiff alleged had been, shortly before his death, conveyed by her husband G to J in trust to sell and hold the proceeds in trust for G's family. The defendant denied the trust, and insisted that J had purchased the house from G for valuable consideration. Both J and G were Parsis. Held, that, even assuming that no consideration was given by J to G for the house, the plaintiff was not entitled to succeed. In the absence of consideration, the trust of the house, which was admittedly conveyed by G to J, would have resulted to G, unless, under the provisions of s. 7 of the Statute of Frauds (39 Car. II, c. 3), he (G) had declared in writing some other trust which was to supersede the resulting trust in his own favour. No such declaration of trust in writing was proved. If, on the other hand, the trust did result to G, he, no doubt, might, as equitable owner of the house, have disposed of his interest by will. If he did so, the plaintiff had not qualified herself to sue as his representative. Probate had not been obtained of the will, and, until the will was proved, it could not be said that G had made a particular declaration of trust by it. Nor without probate could the plaintiff take up the position of legal representative of her deceased husband entitled to enforce his rights, and, amongst others, his rights under the supposed resulting trust. Except as executrix or as administratrix, the plaintiff could not recover property or enforce rights equitably vested in her deceased husband. BAI MANECKBAI v. BAI MERBAL

The trustees refused to hand over the trust-property, and A thereupon instituted a suit to have the trust set aside. His wife was a minor, and there was no issue of the marriage. Held, that, although there might be cases in which, where no other person but the settlor was interested, the deed might be regarded as a mere direction as to the manner in which the settlor's property should be applied for his benefit, and as such revocable by the settlor, yet that, in the present case, there being an infant beneficiary, the deed could not be revoked. 31. ——— Trust not completed—Trust deed—Trust not completed—No possession of trust property taken by trustees—Deed never acted upon—Gift by deed in future without present gift to support it—Estate in abeyance—Class—Gift to class, who may take. On the 17th October 1872, one Mulji Jaitha and his son Soondardas Mulji, who lived together as members of a joint Hindu family, executed a trust-deed by which they conveyed to the said Soondardas Mulji and three other persons as trustees a large amount of property in trust (ultimately) for the sons of Soonderdas Mulji in equal shares when the youngest of such sons should attain twenty-one years of age or the survivor of the wives of Soondardas Mulji should die, whichever should last happen. At the date of his deed, Sundardas Mulji had only one son, who was then eight years old, but on the 6th Magsir Sud 1931 (14th December 1874) a second son (the plaintiff) was born, and he attained his majority on 6th Magsir Sud 1952, i.e., the 22nd November 1895, the two widows of Soondardas having previously died. Soondardas Mulji died on the 13th January 1875, leaving a will dated 1st December 1874, i.e., just a fortnight before the plaintiff was born. In this will he declared that in the event of his death his father (Mulji Jaitha) was the owner of the property mentioned in the will, and after his death Dharamsi (testator's son) should succeed, and in case he (testator) should have another son, such son should take an equal share. After Soondardas's death his father Mulji Jaitha remained in sole possession of all the property of which in Soondardas's lifetime the two had been in joint possession, including the properties comprised in the trust-deed and the properties which Soondardas had purported to dispose of by his will. Mulji Jaitha died in August 1889, leaving a will, dated 30th October 1888, whereby, after giving certain legacies, he directed that the remainder of his property should be divided between his two grandsons Dharamsi and Gordhandas (the plaintiff) in equal shares. After Mulji Jaitha's death Dharamsi at first solely managed the estate, including the properties comprised in the trust-deed ; but when the plaintiff attained his majority, he was admitted to the joint management and the two brothers continued to manage down to Dharamsi's death on the 28th February 1899. Dharamsi left a will, dated 7th February 1899, in which he claimed for the first time that the properties in the trust-deed were his sole property and also certain of the properties mentioned in the will of his father Soondardas, and he bequeathed the whole of such properties to his son, the defendant Karsandas. The plaintiff thereupon filed this suit, contending that the trust-deed was inoperative, and that he was entitled to a moiety of the estate, and that Dharamsi's will was of no effect. Held, that the trust-deed was inoperative and of no effect—(i) inasmuch as, under its provisions, the estate was to be held in abeyance from the date of the deed until the youngest son of Soondardas should attain his majority. There was no gift of income or corpus during this interval, and thus there was no estate to support the ultimate gift to the sons of Soondardas ; and (ii) inasmuch as the possession of the properties comprised in the trust-deed was never in fact given to the trustees, and the trust was therefore never perfectly created. Held, also, on the evidence, that Soondardas had no property of his own to dispose of, and that his will was wholly inoperative. Held, therefore, that under the will of Mulji Jaitha, the plaintiff and Dharamsi were entitled in equal shares to all the property left by Mulji Jaitha, including the property comprised in the trust-deed. Where, by a will or deed, there is a gift to a class, the rule is that a member of the class who can take must take unless the Court is satisfied on the will or deed that the testator or settlor intended that the class, and not any individual member thereof should take. The defendant, a Native Christian, had been holding one of the houses on payment of a monthly rent. A notice to quit was served upon the defendant by a trustee of the Baptist Mission Society, and the defendant not having complied therewith a suit was brought by the trustee to eject him. Held, that the trust did not come to an end as soon as certain houses had been built and some Native Christians were settled therein as tenants, but was something like a perpetual trust, and the beneficiaries under the trust were the Baptist Mission Society and not the Native Christian community. That the trustees of the Baptist Mission Society, having the power of management of the trusts, had also the power to eject a tenant. Quære: Whether the trustees were absolute owners of the premises. Smith v. *Anderson, L. On a construction of this provision:—Held, that having regard to the words that follow the phrase in the indenture in question, the word "absolutely" cannot be taken as conferring an unfettered and unlimited interest on the persons designed as trustees; and that the words used created a valid trust for charitable purposes in the events, which had happened. The ambiguity of the language used on the one subject cannot control the clear and unambiguous words employed with regard to the other. The construction placed on an earlier document could not be used in construing a letter document executed by the same person, when the later document did not embody or refer obtained from executors before probate—Validity of election of trustee elected at meeting from which such debenture-holders were excluded. In order to secure certain money which it had borrowed by the issue of debentures, the D Company on the 23rd November 1883 conveyed certain lands, etc., to three trustees K, G, and D by way of mortgage. With regard to the appointment of new trustees in case any trustee should die, etc., the indenture of mortgage provided that, in certain events, the surviving or continuing trustees might convene a meeting of the debenture-holders for the purpose of nominating a new trustee; and that at such meeting the election of such new trustee should be decided by a majority of votes of the debenture-holders present in person, each party having only one vote, and in case of an equality of votes, then the chairman of the meeting should have a casting vote. K, one of the trustees appointed under the deed, died on the 9th February 1886, leaving a will whereby he appointed three executors. At the time of his death K was the holder of one moiety of the debentures, viz., 1,400 debentures of the value of ₹7,00,000. The two remaining trustees, G and D, called a meeting of the debenture-holders for the 27th February 1886 to elect a trustee. Previously to the meeting and for the purpose of having the large interests of K's estate adequately represented, the executors of K distributed some of the debentures in their hands belonging to K's estate among nominees for the purpose of voting at the meeting; and they also sold some of the debentures. Among the persons to whom debentures were sold were the first three plaintiffs. Pursuant to the notice convening the meeting, the plaintiffs and other persons, to whom debentures belonging to the estate of K had been given or sold, presented themselves and claimed to attend the meeting; but none of them, except the three executors (plaintiffs 4, 5, and 6) of K, were allowed to attend, and they were admitted only in their capacity as executors. Defendant No. 1 was chairman of the meeting, and he ruled that the three executors had a joint right, in their capacity an executors, to give one vote upon any proposition that might be submitted to the meeting. At the meeting it was proposed that the holders of the debentures, who claimed admission to the meeting, should be permitted to attend. The chairman ruled the motion irrelevant, and would not allow it to be put. The executors therefore withdrew from the meeting. After they had withdrawn, the third defendant, P, was elected a trustee. At the date of the meeting the executors had not obtained probate of K's will. On behalf of the defendants it was contended that P's election was valid; and that the persons to whom the executors had given or sold debentures belonging to K's estate had been properly excluded from the meeting of the 27th February, inasmuch as the executors had not at that time obtained probate, and consequently the title of their alienees to the debentures was still incomplete. Held, that

P (defendant No. 3) had not been validly appointed a trustee to the indenture of the 23rd November 1883. Under that indenture, debenture-holders had the right to vote, and the debentures were payable to bearer. The fact that the executors had not at the date of the meeting obtained probate did not affect the rights of those to whom they had given or sold debentures, and such persons had consequently been improperly excluded from the meeting. This settlement was made, and under it a portion of the legacy was assigned to trustees, who did not execute the deed or undertake the trust, and no other trustee was substituted for them. O G & Co. at various times advanced money to J S, and in acknowledgment received promissory notes from her for a portion of such advances; and in a suit by O G & Co. to recover the amount of these advances, it was held that O G & Co., standing in a fiduciary relation to J S, before they could avail themselves of her acts, must show that she did them with a full knowledge of the circumstances of the case and of her own position with regard to it. 8. ——— Suit for mesne profits where estates had been under care of Court of Wards—Cause of action—Fiduciary relationship. Plaintiff, the zamindar of Shivaganga, sued to recover two villages which she alleged formed part of the Shivaganga zamindari. The villages originally belonged to P, mother of the present defendant, B, the ex-zamindar of Shivaganga. In 1856 they were purchased by the Court of Wards on behalf of B, who was then a minor, with part of the rents and profits of the zamindari, and in 1860 were given by him to his mother. In 1864 B was ousted by a decree of the Privy Council, and became liable to the present plaintiff for the mesne profits of the zamindari. In the account taken of mesne profits due, the amount expended on the purchase of these villages was excluded by plaintiff's consent from the sum debited to the ex-zamindar. Plaintiff now sued P, and, she dying, the suit was continued against B as her representative. Held, that, there being in the decree of the Privy Council nothing directly giving a right to maintain the suit, there was but one ground upon which the suit could be supposed to lie, namely, the existence of the relation of trustee and beneficiary between the Collector and the plaintiff at the time of the purchase. Held, also, that such relation did not exist. Where a transaction by the trustee is primâ facie improvident, it lies upon the trustee to show, as against the beneficiary, that it is one which the Court can uphold. Where a breach of trust has been committed and a suit is brought by the beneficiary against the trustee and the party who has received money through such transaction to recover such money for the trust estate, it is open to the Court by its decree to direct payment of such money to the trustee by the defendant who has received such payment unless it is established that the beneficiary can get no relief unless he seeks to remove the trustee and procure the appointment of another. Where trust-money has, by a breach of trust, been paid by the trustee, the beneficiary is entitled to follow it as trust-property in the hands of the payee. National Trustees Company of Australasia v. General Finance Company of Australasia, *[1905] A. ——— s. 3—contd.

the operation of the Act only to cases to which, in their whole extent, the law prevailing in England applies without qualification or reserve, as this would virtually exclude the Act in any case on which an Act of the Indian Legislature has any bearing. The cases referred to in the section must be cases to which English law is in some measure applicable, but in what measure is not indicated in the Act. English law must be regarded as applicable in the sense intended if the principles recognized by the English Equity Courts are applicable. At the date of the grant of the Charter to the Supreme Court of Bombay in the year 1823, English equity had become a system which would deal with a body of quasi-common law in a scientific manner and in obedience to known and uniform rules. When it applied its method to the determination or the constitution of a right, even based on the Hindu or Mahomedan law, it administered English law. In this sense "English law was applicable" at the date of the passing of the Trustee Act of 1866 to all cases in which peculiarly equitable doctrines had obtained recognition in the relations between the native inhabitants of Bombay. Those doctrines could not be employed to subvert the native substantive laws, but they afforded a means of ameliorating them by a system for rules borrowed from the English Court of Equity. Trusts are recognized in the Hindu as well as in the English system of law. But while the substantive Hindu law insists strongly on the suppression of fraud and the fulfilment of promises, it fails to furnish the detailed rules by which effect is to be given to its principles in cases of trust. If the Court is called on to give effect to a trust in any given case, it looks to the Hindu law of property to determine the estate of the trustee, but with reference to the duties of trustee and the rights of beneficiaries it is governed by the rules of English equity. There are no others that it can apply. In meeting an exigency, or in taking cognizance of a form of right not directly provided for in the Shastras the Court, in exercising its jurisdiction under s. 41 of the Charter of 1823, may apply Hindu law. But, taking Hindu law as one of its data, it applies "English law" also in the form of equity to all or nearly all the questions that arise. In re KAHANDAS NARRANDAS I. L. R. 5 Bom. 154

By his will he directed his executors to apply the income, arising from the land in defraying the expenses connected with the temple. This was accordingly done by his son, whom he had appointed his executor. His son died in 1873, and in 1879 the petitioner, who was the son's widow, took out letters of administration, with the will annexed, to the estate of J S, still unadministered. As administratrix she continued to apply the income of the said land as directed in the will. She now filed the present petition, alleging that the said income, which amounted to about R900 per annum, was insufficient to keep up the said charity. She stated that a sum of R12,600 was urgently required for certain purposes connected with the said charity, that she had agreed, in September 1887, with one R B, that he should advance the said sum to her, to be expended as aforesaid, and that she should grant to him a lease of the said land for 99 years with a proviso for renewal at a rent of R350 per mensem. The Court will not, under this section, advise trustees as to disputed points of law or fact, but will do so only as to undisputed matters of management, such as questions of advancement, maintenance, change of investment, sale of a house, compromises, taking proceedings, etc. Held, also, that, as a matter of general principle, the trustee of the property in question could make a lease thereof for the benefit of the trust, or raise money by way of charge for the purposes of necessary repairs and maintenance; but with regard to the details of amount or as to the work to be done, the Court refused to give any opinion. In re LAKSHMIBAI.

Maintainability under s. 187 of Succession Act of a suit by the beneficiary for the benefit conferred in the absence of Probate or Letters of Administration. Under English law, where a testator disposes of property in favour of a legatee, and, at the time of such disposition or at any subsequent period during his lifetime, the testator informs the legatee that the disposition in his favour although apparently for his benefit, was so made in order that he may carry into effect certain wishes of the testator, which are communicated to him, and the legatee expressly or impliedly undertakes to carry out the wishes so expressed to him by the testator, the legatee will be treated as a trustee and will be compelled to carry out the instructions so confided to him. The reason for this rule is that it would be a fraud on the part of the legatee not to give effect to the testator's intentions, and the law will not permit him to benefit by his own fraud. The legislature in enacting s. 5 of the Indian Trusts Act and the provision thereto, intended to make this rule of equity applicable in India. S. 50 of the Indian Succession Act does not apply to such cases. The instructions of the testator are given effect to under the English law, and under s. 5 of the Trusts Act, not as a part of the will, but by fastening on the conscience of the legatee a personal obligation to carry into effect the wishes of the testator, in order to prevent the perpetration of fraud. The title of the beneficiaries is one dehors the will and not under the will. Per WALLIS, J.—The provisions of s. 81 of the Indian Trusts Act do not apply to such cases. Per SANKARAN-NAIR, J.—S. 81 applies where the testator intending to dispose of the beneficial interest to others leaves the estate to the devisees. This section has reference to the disposal of the beneficial interest by transfer or will. Where such a legatee, to whom the testator has confided his intention, suppresses such secret instructions with the intention of retaining the estate himself and applies for letters of administration as universal legatee, the Court will refuse the grant. McCormick v. Grogan, L. R. 4 E. & I. 82, p. 97, referred to. In re Maddock Llewelyn v. Washington, [1902] 2 Ch. 220, referred to. Per WALLIS, J.—The beneficiary entitled under the secret trust communicated to and accepted by the legatee claims through the legatee named in the will; and as no right as legatee can be established without a grant of probate or letters of administration under s. 187 of the Indian Succession Act, the beneficiary cannot maintain a suit to recover the benefit intended for him when there is no grant of probate or letters of administration. Per SANKARAN-NAIR J.—(contra).—S. 187 of the Succession Act is no bar to such a suit as the beneficiary does not sue to establish any claim as legatee, but to enforce the trust imposed on the legatee, as far as he is concerned. The suit is to enforce an obligation against the legatee and not to establish any right of the legatee as such. ——— s. 30—Executor—Failure to produce fund at appointed time—Advisory duty—Appointment of an agent—Degree of care in the appointment—Want of diligence—Breach of duty—Loss caused to the estate—Liability of executor. When those entrusted with a fund for the benefit of another cannot produce it at the appointed time, primâ facie, they are liable for the loss which thereby accrues. One, who undertakes a duty, is bound to know what his duty requires. Where a testator by his will committed the management of the property to his widow along with two out of the five executors including the widow, it is not open to one of the executors who was not specifically entrusted with the management, to contend for the purpose of avoiding liability as executor that his duties were purely advisory, that he was but one of many that votes of the majority of the executors governed, and that the real management was entrusted to two of the executors in co-operation with the widow. In the appointment of an agent to carry on business it is incumbent on an executor to act with the same degree of care as a man of ordinary prudence would in his own affairs. But where there is want of diligence on the part of the executor both in the selection and supervision of the agent, and the loss sustained by the estate can reasonably be connected with the want of such diligence the loss must fall on the executor. The indemnity clause of s. 30 of the Trusts Act (II of 1882) casts the onus of proof on those, who seek to charge a trustee with loss arising from the default of an agent, when the propriety of employing an agent has been established. But where there is a clear breach of duty in the employment and supervision of the agent the liability of the trustee for breach of trust arises. LAKHMICHAND v. JAI KUVARBAI (1905) . . I. L. detail and difficulty—Procedure. The management of the Doveton charities is vested in a committee of management who are empowered under the trust-deed to require the trustees of the funds of the charities to invest the trust-funds in excess of two lakhs of rupees "in the purchase or building of any additional land, building, and premises." Certain buildings, having been erected under these provisions of the trust-deed, were now stated to be in urgent want of repair. The current income of the charities was not sufficient to meet the cost of carrying out the repairs, and the committee of management and the trustees were agreed that a sum of R8,700 in the hands of the latter (in excess of two lakhs of rupees) should be employed in carrying out this work. The trustees now applied to the High Court under the Trusts Act, s. 34, for its opinion on the question whether this should be done. Held, that the question was not one with which the Court could deal under the Trusts Act, s. 34. The Court (SUBRAMANIA AYYAR J.) was of opinion that the proposed expenditure could, on the Court being satisfied of its necessity be sanctioned, if the matter came before it in the form of a suit in its original jurisdiction ; and that in the exercise of such jurisdiction the Court has power to deal with a case like this hardly admitted of doubt. In re MADRAS DOVETON TRUST FUND I. This is the construction, which ought to be placed on the words "not carried into execution" in s. 84 of the Indian Trusts Act. ——— Trustee—Transactions entered into by trustee for his own benefit—"Unless otherwise provided"—Equity in favour of a person paying off a subsisting charge on property—Appointment of cestui que trust as trustee. S. 53 of the Indian Trusts Act (II of 1882) strikes at transactions entered into by a trustee for his own profit after he has accepted the trust and while he is performing the duties of the office. It does not render void a mortgage in favour of a person created before he becomes trustee of the property by the deed of trust itself as a condition of the trust imposed by the settlor. The expression "unless otherwise provided" used in s. 36 of the Indian Trusts Act (II of 1882), means, unless otherwise provided by the instrument of trust. Where there is a subsisting charge on certain property paid off by the person in possession, it is equitable that when the plaintiff reclaims the estate, credit should be given to that person for the payment of the mortgage which the plaintiff would have had to meet. Mahomed Shumsool v. *Shewukram, L. There is no provision in the Indian Trusts Act (II of 1882) that a cestue que trust shall not be appointed a trustee. ——— ss. 63 and 64—Trust not established. A claim made for a share of property by inheritance from a deceased relation who had been in joint possession of it with the defendant was met by the defence that the estate had been jointly held for religious and charitable purposes under a will, the deceased having had no beneficial or heritable interest. The defendant alleged that the original owner of the property had bequeathed the property in trust for these purposes. The claimant alleged a revocation of the will, and denied that there was such a trust. The judgment of the High Court, decreeing the claim, observed that, even assuming that there had been a trust under the will recognized by the deceased and the defendant, the property which had come into their possession had been by them appropriated from the first to their own purposes, and had been so long held by them adversely to the trust title that the defendant could not now allege that there was no beneficial interest transmissible by inheritance. Upon this the Judicial Committee pointed out that no trustee could have actually acquired a title by such an appropriation against the trust: Indian Trusts Act, 1882, ss. 63 and 64. They added that, at the same time, the judgment of the High Court had come to the right conclusion, for the will and the trust alleged had not been established. Where from the terms of an ubhayapattom it is clear that the debt was not intended to be extinguished, a covenant for perpetual renewal by the mortgagor operates as a clog on the equity of redemption and the addition of the words "you shall hold the properties for ever without surrendering them" does not convert such a transaction into an immediate grant of a permanent interest. Such a covenant will be inoperative as a clog on the mortgagor's right of redemption in a mortgage executed before the passing of the Transfer of Property Act and subsequent to 1858, on the principles of equity which formed the basis of judicial decisions during that period. 1. ——— Undue influence—Circumstances under which relief may be granted by the Court. A person of the age of some twenty-eight years, the son of a wealthy father, but of profligate habits and greatly in need of money, his father having refused to supply him, executed a bond to secure a sum of R500, with interest, which amounted to R37-8-0 per cent. per annum, with six-monthly rests. The bond further contained a stipulation that the borrower should not be empowered to repay the money within three years. And if he did pay within three years, he should nevertheless be obliged to pay three years' interest at the rate mentioned. Held, that, although it could not be said that the execution of this bond was procured by means of undue influence or that the rate of interest was penal, nevertheless the bargain was an unconscionable bargain against which the Court might properly give relief. The High Court affirmed the decree of the lower Appellate Court which gave the plaintiff the principal sum with simple interest at the rate of 24 per centum per annum. Madho Singh v. *Kashi Ram, I. 2. ——— Unconscionable bargain—Parties not on an equal footing—Defendant not aware of the nature of the transaction—Undue influence—Contract voidable. To render a contract voidable on the ground of undue influence there must be evidence of undue influence as required by s. 16 of the Contract Act. A high rate of interest, which would induce a Court of Equity to give relief against a bargain as being on that account hard and unconscionable, is not by itself sufficient evidence of undue influence. There must be additional circumstances and when there is evidence of such additional circumstances they should be considered in the light of justice and equity. When the parties to the transaction are not on an equal footing, when it appears that the borrower was not aware of the real nature of the bargain, so that he put his signature to a document, which in fact imposed very different terms to those appearing on the face of it, when the actual rate of interest is many times higher than what appears on the document, which the borrower when pressed for payment for what appears due on such a document has to renew on still more exorbitant terms, all these are additional circumstances sufficient to make out a primâ facie case of undue in-

2. ———— Gift—Suit—Benami transactions—Pardanashin lady—Suit to set aside deeds as having been executed by person of unsound mind—Alleged influence of daughter over her mother—Gift with imaginary consideration inserted in deed. In a suit by a son to set aside certain transactions entered into by his mother, a Mahomedan lady, in favour of her daughter, the defendant, by which the daughter acquired possession of most of her mother's property, the plaint alleged that his mother was, at the time the transactions took place, of "unsound mind and entirely under the domination and control" of her daughter. Both Courts in India found that the mother was not of unsound mind; but the first Court treated her as a pardanashin lady and as "entirely under the control and domination" of the defendant, who had unscrupulously used her power over her mother to get her mother's property into her own hands, and made a decree that the transactions should be avoided on the ground of undue influence. The Court of appeal reversed the finding with respect to undue influence and dismissed the suit. Held, that, assuming the question of undue influence could be set up at all (for it was not raised in the pleadings except with regard to unsoundness of mind, which had been negatived, nor was any issue raised upon it), no case of undue influence had been established by the evidence. The mere relation of daughter to mother in itself suggested nothing in the way of special

influence or control; and the evidence was insufficient to establish any general case of domination on the part of the daughter, any subjection of the mother, such as to lead to a presumption against any transaction between the two; and with regard to the actual transactions, there was no evidence whatever of undue influence brought to bear upon them. Held, also, that in the evidence and circumstances of the case the transactions in dispute were absolute gifts, and not benami transactions, which might have been set aside. 4. ——— Contract Act (IX of 1872), ss. 16, 19A—Unconscionable bargain—Parties not on an equal footing—Defendant not aware of the nature of the transaction—Contract voidable. To render a contract voidable on the ground of undue influence there must be evidence of undue influence as required by s. 16 of the Contract Act. A high rate of interest, which would induce a Court of Equity to give relief against a bargain as being on that account hard and unconscionable is not by itself sufficient evidence of undue influence. There must be additional circumstances and when there is evidence of such additional circumstances they should be considered in the light of justice and equity. When the parties to the transaction are not on an equal footing, when it appears that the borrower was not aware of the real nature of the bargain so that he put his signature to a document which in fact imposed very different terms to those appearing on the face of it, when the actual rate of interest is many times higher than what appears on the document, when the borrower when pressed for payment for what appears due on such a document has to renew on still more exorbitant terms, all these are additional circumstances sufficient to make out a primâ facie case of undue influence so as to throw the onus on the lenders to disprove it. 5. ——— Promise to pay a time-barred debt—Undue influence—Urgent need of money—Loan borrowed by a person in urgent need of money—Unfair and unconscionable bargains—Fraud—Coercion—Equity. The defendant, a karkun in the Government service, being heavily indebted and being very much harassed by his creditors, applied to the plaintiff for a loan or a mortgage. The plaintiff agreed to lend provided the defendant executed a khata for the payment of R307-4-0 originally due by the latter's father, but which in 1894 had been held to be time-barred in a suit brought by the plaintiff and also for the payment of R25, the costs of that suit. The defendant, accordingly on the 16th September 1895 passed a khata for R332-4-0 for the amount due under which the defendant finally passed a promissory note for R600 on the 27th August 1901. Upon this promisssory note the present suit was brought. The Subordinate Judge held that the defendant received from the plaintiff only R28 on the 16th September 1895, of which R10 had been repaid; and passed a decree for R36 (viz., Rs. 18, the amount of principal, and R18 as interest). On appeal, the District Judge, varied the decree by allowing plaintiff's claim to the further extent of R307-4-0 ; and disallowed the rest of the claim on the ground that it was vitiated by undue influence, which the plaintiff exercised over the defendant. On appeal: Held, that the plaintiff's claim ought to be allowed in full. If, according to law, a promise to pay a debt barred under the Statute of Limitation is valid and is supported on the principle that in so promising the debtor is doing what every honest man, morally speaking, ought to do and would do, the same principle ought equally to apply to a further promise to pay the said debt with interest, because interest is only accessory to the principal, and is paid to the creditor, because the latter has been deprived of the use of the money and the debtor has had the benefit of it. Under s. 16, cl. 1, of the Contract Act (IX of 1872), when two persons enter into a contract, first, there must be a subsisting between them some relation of the kind described in the section, and secondly, the dominating position arising out of that relation must have been used by the party holding that position to secure an unfair advantage over the other party. When a man, who is in urgent need of money on account of his poverty and pecuniary difficulties, asks for a loan from another, that other is in one sense in a position to dominate the will of the former by proposing his own terms and getting the borrower to agree to them. The borrower's necessity is in such cases the measure of the terms agreed to. That is a feature of every contract of money-lending, where the borrower is a man without credit and the lender is exposing his money to considerable risk. But that is not the vague kind of relation and domination contemplated by the plain terms of cl. 1 of s. 16 of the Contract Act (IX of 1872). There are well-known relations such as those of guardian and ward, father and son, patient and medical adviser, solicitor and client, trustee and cestui que trust and the like which plainly fall within cl. 1 of the section. Where no such specific relations exist and the parties are at arm's length, being strangers, undue influence may be exerted, but its existence must be proved by evidence; and in such cases, the nature of the benefit, or the age, capacity, or health of the party, on whom the undue influence is alleged to have been exerted, are of great importance. In short, the test is, confidence reposed by one party and betrayed by the other, which means that there must be an element of fraud or coercion, under either of which the acts constituting undue influence must range themselves. The expression "unfair advantage" in cl. 1 of s. 16 of the Contract Act (IX of 1872) is used as meaning an advantage obtained by unrighteous means. A Court of Equity will not set aside a contract, merely because it flows from moral not legal obligations, unless it was proved that the defendant was forced, tricked or misled into it by the plaintiff by means of fraud, using that word not merely in the restricted sense of actual deceit, but in the larger sense of an unconscientious use of power arising out of certain circumstances and conditions, and showing that the defendant having been victimised by the plaintiff's unfair and improper conduct was unable to understand what he was doing. The river at the time was almost dry, and the party did not go armed ready to fight or use force, and they did not during the subsequent occurrence use force. Having arrived at the spot about 10 A.M., they proceeded to work at the bund until the afternoon. At about 4 P.M., a body of men, consisting of about 1,200 in all, many of them armed with lathies and headed by the prisoners, who were servants of M, which had been seen collecting together during the day, proceeded to the spot, and about 25 or 30 of them attacked T's men, some five of whom were more or less severely wounded with the lathies. The occurrence resulted in the conviction of some of M's servants for rioting under s. 147 of the Penal Code. M's people wholly denied any right on the part of T to construct or repair the bund, and had previously denied the existence of such right, and refused permission to T to exercise it. It was contended that the assembly of M's people was not an "unlawful assembly," that the interference by T's people with the channel of the river justified them in coming to stop the work, and the show and use of force in compelling them to do so. Held, that the prisoners had been rightly convicted. It was further contended that M's people did not assemble to enforce a right or supposed right within the terms of s. 141 of the Penal Code, but to defend a right, and that such action did not make the assembly an unlawful one. Held, that they were members of an assembly the common object of which was by show of criminal force, and by criminal force, if necessary, to enforce the right to keep the river channel clear by preventing the construction of the bund and by demolishing it so far as it was constructed, and that the case came

20. ——— Penal Code, ss. 149 and 300, except. 2—Common object—Murder. One member of an unlawful assembly, whose common object was to eject certain persons from a piece of land, the title to which was disputed, fired at and killed one of such persons. Held by COUCH, C.J., and JACKSON, PHEAR and PONTIFEX, JJ. (AINSLIE, J., dissenting), that the act being sudden and unpremeditated, the other members of the assembly were not guilty of the offence of murder under s. 149 of the Penal Code, but of rioting with a deadly weapon under s. 148 QUEEN v. SABED ALI 11 B. 21. ——— Common object—Murder. A large body of men belonging to one faction waylaid another body of men belonging to a second faction, and a fight ensued, in the course of which a member of the first-mentioned faction was wounded, and retired to the side of the road, taking no further active part in the affray. After his retirement, a member of the second faction was killed. Held (by NORMAN, J., whose opinion prevailed), that the wounded man had ceased to be a member of the unlawful assembly when he retired wounded, and that he could not, under s. 149 of the Penal Code, be made liable for subsequent murder. Held (by JACKSON, J.) that, he remained a member of the unfawful assembly QUEEN v. KABIL CAZEE . 3 B. L. R. A. Cr. 1

22. ——————— Prosecution of common object. If a body of men armed with lathies and under the leadership of one who to the knowledge of the rest is armed with a gun, assembled for the purpose of forcibly carrying off another man's property, and if in effecting that purpose any one of the party, taking the gun, shoots and kills a person who is making a lawful resistance, the whole party may properly be convicted of murder under s. 149 of the Penal Code. Queen v. Sabed Ali, 11 B. L. R. 347 : 20 W. R. Cr. 5, cited. HARI SINGH v. EMPRESS 3 C. L. R. 49

23. ——————— Acts taking place after unlawful assembly is over. Where, after the object of an unlawful assembly had been accomplished and the opposite party driven away, one of the members entered into an altercation with another and wounded him with a fish-spear, it was held that the act was not one done with a view to accomplish the common object of the assembly, or one which the rest knew would be likely to be committed in the prosecution of that object. QUEEN v. BINOD 24 W. R. Cr. 66

24. ——— Penal Code, ss. 151 and 188 —Assembly of five or more persons—Lawful command. Where the object of only three persons was to draw a crowd and their action was such as was calculated to and did draw a crowd of fifty or sixty persons likely to cause a disturbance of the public peace :—Held, that the gathering constituted an assembly of five or more persons within the meaning of s. 151 of the Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), and that a refusal to disperse after being lawfully commanded to disperse rendered every member of the gathering liable to conviction under the said section. An order given by an officer superior in rank to an officer in charge of police stations commanding an assembly of five or more persons likely to cause a disturbance of the public peace to disperse is a lawful order within the meaning of s. 480 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1872). EMPESS v. TUCKER I. L. R. 7 Bom. 42

25. ——— Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 302, 304—Good faith—Order of superior officer—Firing on an unlawful assembly. A caused crops to be sown on land, as to the enjoyment of which there was a dispute between her and B. Persons having proceeded to reap the crops on behalf of B, the servants of A went to the place with the station-house officer and some constables who were armed. The station-house officer ordered the reapers to leave off reaping and to disperse ; but they did not do so ; he then told one of the constables to fire, and he fired into the air. Some of the reapers remained and assumed a defiant attitude. The station-house officer, without attempting to make any arrests and without warning the reapers that, if they did not desist from reaping, they would be fired at, gave orders to shoot, and one of the constables fired and mortally wounded one of the reapers. It was found that neither the station-house officer nor the last-mentioned constable believed that it was necessary for the public security to disperse the reapers by firing on them. Held, that the station-house officer and the constable were not acting in good faith, and that the order to shoot was illegal and did not justify the constable, and that both he and the station-house officer were guilty of murder. QUEEN-EMPRESS v. SUBBA NAIK I. L. R. 21 Mad. 249

26. ——— Penal Code, ss. 147, 148, 149 and 304—Rioting armed with a deadly weapon—Common object of unlawful assembly. Statement of, in charge—Error in charge misleading accused—Criminal Procedure Code, 1882, s. 225. Before a conviction can properly be maintained for the offence of rioting, it is necessary that there should be a clear finding as to the common object of the unlawful assembly, and also that the common object so found should have been stated in the charge in order that the accused person might have an opportunity of meeting it. Where a Sessions Judge in his charge to the jury referred to two possible common objects of an unlawful assembly, one of which only had been set out in the charge sheet :—Held, that, inasmuch as it was impossible to say which of the two common objects had been accepted by the jury, and it might well have been that they had accepted the one which had not been charged, and which consequently the accused had not had an opportunity of meeting, the conviction must be set aside. If one member of an unlawful assembly is armed with a deadly weapon, the other members cannot on that account be charged under s. 148 of the Penal Code. It is only the actual person who can be charged under that section. SABIR v. QUEEN-EMPRESS I. L. R. 22 Calc. 276

27. ——— Penal Code, s. 149—Common object—Murder—Prosecution of common object. Neither of the cases of Queen v. Sabed Ali, 11 B. L. R. F. B. 347 : 20 W. R. Cr. 5, and Hari Singh v. Empress, 3 C. L. R. 49, lays down any hard-and-fast rule as to the circumstances under which one member of an unlawful assembly can be deemed guilty of an offence committed by another under the provisions of s. 149 of the Penal Code, and every case must be decided on its own merits. In dealing with such cases, while, on the one hand, it is necessary for the protection of the accused that he should not, merely by reason of his association with others as members of an unlawful assembly, be held criminally liable for offences committed by his associates which he himself neither intended nor knew to be likely to be committed. On the other hand, it is equally necessary for the protection of the peace that members of an unlawful assembly should not lightly be let off from suffering the penalties for offences for which, though committed by others, the law has made them punishable by reason of their association with the actual offender with one common object. Those two cases respectively emphasize the necessity of keeping these considerations in view. Members of an unlawful assembly may have a community of object only up to a certain point, beyond which they may differ in their objects, and the knowledge possessed by each member of what is likely to be committed in prosecution of their common object will vary, not only according to the information at his command, but also according to the extent to which he shares the community of object, and as a consequence of this the effect of s. 149 may be different on different members of the same unlawful assembly. 28. ——— Common object disbelieved —Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 379, 141, 147—Theft—Rioting—Common object charged, when disbelieved, finding by Appellate Court of a different, if proper. If the common object fails and the substantive charge is disbelieved, the accused should be acquitted. It is not proper for an Appellate Court, while disbelieving the alleged common object of an unlawful assembly, to find out a different common object regarding which the accused were never called upon to plead nor tried, and to affirm the conviction. RAHIMUDDI v. ASGARALI (1900)

29. ——— Proof of unlawful assembly—Hiring and harbouring persons hired for an unlawful assembly, ingredients of offences of —Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 141, 150 and 157. S. 50 of the Penal Code refers to a particular unlawful assembly. Where, therefore, it is found that any person has hired or engaged any other person to join or become a member of a particular unlawful assembly, he is liable for any offence committed by any member of that unlawful assembly, in the same way as if he had been a member of such unlawful assembly or himself had committed such offence. S. 157 of the Penal Code is of wider application. It provides for an occurrence that may happen, and makes the harbouring, receiving or an assembling of persons who are likely to be engaged in any unlawful assembly an offence. There, again, the law contemplates the imminence of an unlawful assembly, and the proof of facts which in law would go to constitute an unlawful assembly. Therefore, where a Magistrate only found that "what the accused had been doing is collecting and harbouring men for the purpose of committing a riot should he find it his interest to do so," and there was no finding that there had been any unlawful assembly, composed of persons said to have been hired by the accused and in the course of which some offence had been committed for which the accused would have been responsible equally with those who were members of that unlawful assembly, or that an unlawful assembly made up of the elements provided for by s. 141 of the Penal Code was in the contemplation of the accused. Held, that the accused could not be convicted of having committed offences under ss. 150 and 157 of the Penal Code. 30. ——— Penal Code, s. 143—Possession of land, question of—Onus of proof—Prosecution, duty of, to prove facts—Presumption. Where some persons were accused and charged with having come upon a piece of land with a large number of people and committed mischief in respect of some indigo crops said to have been raised upon it by the complainant's tenants, and the accused pleaded that they held the land from some time before, and in proof put in a road-cess return, filed by the complainant, showing that the accused were, at the date when the return was filed, in possession of a larger plot of land, of which they claimed the land in dispute to be a part:—Held, that the presumption as to the possession of the disputed land was in favour of the accused and that it was for the prosecution to prove that the accused gave up possession of the land of which they had held previous possession, or that they had held some other lands in the same village which were mentioned in the road-cess return, before any conviction could be had of the accused. 31. ——— Lawful assembly becoming unlawful—Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 141, 146—Rioting—Common object— A lawful assembly may turn unlawful all on a sudden, and without previous concert among its members. Among the members of a religious procession, those who may be actually found resorting to force and violence with the common object of overawing a police officer in the lawful discharge of his duties would constitute themselves an unlawful assembly. 32. ——— Defence by accused persons of property in their possession. Paddy belonging to a society, to which the first accused belonged, was stored in a granary in a street. It was found as a fact that this paddy had been in the possession of the first accused for some time prior to 5th November 1899, and was in his possession on that date. Complainant, on 5th November 1899, attempted, as treasurer of the society, forcibly to take possession of the paddy, with his servants, whereupon all the accused resisted him, and maintained the possession of the first accused, some blows being struck. On a charge being preferred against the accused for rioting: Held, that no offence had been committed. KING-EMPEROR v. AYYA ANNASAMY AIYAR (1901)

33. ——— Possession of deadly weapons, if necessary to render each member of unlawful assembly liable for offence under s. 144. Penal Code, ss. 114, 144. When one person instigates another to join an unlawful assembly armed with a deadly weapon, and afterwards joins the unlawful assembly himself, he may be punishable under s. 144, Indian Penal Code, read with s. 114, even though he

34. ——— Evidence of common object. Two persons were charged with being members of an unlawful assembly armed with deadly weapons for the purpose of committing dacoity. The facts proved were that a crowd of about 100 persons, including the accused, had assembled together, armed with bill-hooks and sticks; and that the crowd had dispersed at once on seeing the police. On these facts the Magistrate assumed that the intention of the members of the crowd was to use criminal force, and, having regard to the weapons with which they were armed, he convicted the accused under s. 144 of the Indian Penal Code. Held, that the prosecution had failed to show that the common object of the crowd was such as would constitute it an unlawful assembly, as defined by s. 141 of the Indian Penal Code, and that the accused were entitled to be acquitted. QUEEN-EMPRESS v. PEELIMUTHU TEVAN (1900)

35. ——— Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 148, 149, 324—Rioting, armed with deadly weapon—Offence committed in prosecution of common object. The principal accused, who was unarmed, appeared with a large number of followers before the house of one Jubbar Ali, and ordered three of them, who also were not armed, to enter his house and bring him out. In the scuffle which ensued after they had entered the house, a wound was inflicted on another person, Wahid Ali, by one of them, with a dao picked up in the hut. The person who inflicted the wound was not placed on his trial. Of the others who were placed on their trial, the petitioners were convicted by the Joint Magistrate under s. 148 and s. 324, read with s. 149 of the Indian Penal Code. Held, that the conviction under s. 148, Indian Penal Code, was wrong, as each person charged under that section must himself be shown to have been armed. Sabir v. Queen-Empress, I. L. R. 22 Calc. 276, followed. Held, further, that the wound inflicted on Wahid Ali could not be regarded as the natural result of the common enterprise in which the accused were engaged, so that the conviction under s. 324, read with s. 149, was also wrong. 36. ——— Dispute amongst joint owners—Penal Code, s. 143—Unlawful assembly with armed men—Force not actually used—Sentence—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 106—Order against one joint owner—Proceeding against the other owner under s. 107, desirable. Where two parties were entitled to joint possession of a property but one party having been out of possession, their servants (the petitioners) with 30 or 40 other persons went armed with lathies to take forcible possession of the property and succeeded in getting possession without having had to use any force: —Held, that the petitioners were rightly convicted of an offence under s. 143, Indian Penal Code, but as the masters of the petitioners had a right to possession and as what the petitioners did, though not warranted by law, did not actually lead to a breach of the peace, the sentence ought not to be too severe. That an order under s. 106, Criminal Procedure Code, directing the petitioners to execute bonds to keep the peace for one year was, in the circumstances, justifiable but as that order would have the practical effect of preventing the petitioners and their masters from taking possession of the property, it was desirable that the other side should also be bound down in a proceeding under s. 107, Criminal Procedure Code. ——— Unlawful compulsory labour—Criminal force—Slavery—Wrongful confinement—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 344, 352, 374. The accused induced the complainants, who, he alleged, were indebted to him in various sums of money, to consent to live on his premises and to work off their debts. The complainants were to, and did in fact, receive no pay, but were fed by the accused as his servants. He insisted on their working for him, and punished them by beating them if they did not do so. The complainants in addition alleged that they were prevented leaving the accused premises, and that they were locked up at night. On these allegations the accused were convicted by the first Court of offences under ss. 344, 370, and 374 of the Penal Code. On appeal the convictions under the two former sections were quashed, the evidence as to detention being disbelieved, but that under s. 374 was upheld on the ground that by magnifying the complainant's debts to him and never settling their accounts the accused had unfawfully compelled them to go on working for him against their wills. On a rule to show cause why the conviction should not be quashed:—Held (by PETHERAM, C.J., and BEVERLEY, J.), that the conviction was erroneous and must be set aside. PETHERAM, C.J.—A person who insists that another, who has consented to serve him, shall perform his work, does not unlawfully compel such person to labour against his will within the meaning of s. 374 of the Penal Code, because it is a thing which such person has agreed to do; but if he assaults such person for not working to his satisfaction, he commits an offence punishable under s. 352. Held, by NORRIS, J.—That upon the facts of the case the complainants never gave their full and free consent to work and labour for the accused, and the accused therefore did unlawfully compel them to labour against their will, and that the conviction under s. 374 was right. UNSETTLED POLLIAM.

——— Hereditary tenure—Evidence of possession or receipt of rent. There is no long uniform current of decisions at Madras sufficient to show that every polliam, not permanently settled, is necessarily only a tenure for life, or at the will of the Government. Each case must depend upon its own particular circumstances. The existence of a proprietary estate therein, and the tenure by which it has been held, are matters judicially determinable on legal evidence. In India the proof of possession or receipt of rent by a person who pays the land revenue immediately to Government is primâ facie evidence of an estate of inheritance in the case of an ordinary zamindari. The evidence is still stronger if it be proved that the estate has passed on one or more occasions from ancestor to heir. of a suit for the purposes of stamp duty, and the valuation of the subject-matter of the suit for the purpose of determining the jurisdiction of the Court in appeal, are two different things. The value of the suit for the purposes of stamp duty is fixed by certain rules which determine an artificial value for those purposes. The Munsif gave the plaintiff a decree for R900, but dismissed the claim for the balance, which was for damages. On appeal the Subordinate Judge was of opinion that the claim had been designedly exaggerated, and he therefore held that the suit was one cognizable by the Small Cause Court, and directed the plaint to be returned to the plaintiff for the purpose of presenting it to the proper Court. Held, that, as the suit was tried on its merits by the first Court, and the over-valuation of the suit was not found by the Appellate Court to have prejudicially affected the disposal of the suit on its merits, the objection as to jurisdiction should not have been given effect to, and therefore the Court below was wrong in directing the plaint to be returned. Mohee Lall v. *Kheta Ram Marwary, 25 W. Defendant contented that the suit ought to have been valued at R3,000, being the value of the whole 16 annas, and therefore the Munsif had no jurisdiction. The Courts below overruled the objection, holding that, as the value of the share claimed was within the limit of the Munsif's jurisdiction, the suit was brought in the proper Court, and on the merits they found in favour of the plaintiffs. Held, that the disposal of the suit or appeal not having been prejudicially affected in the merits by the under-valuation, the defect of jurisdiction, if any, had been cured by s. 11 of the Suits Valuation Act (VII of 1887). 18. _____ Pecuniary limits of jurisdiction—Suit filed in superior Court—Suit on mortgage and for interest. In a suit on a mortgage, in which the amount claimed was in excess of the pecuniary limits of the jurisdiction of a District Munsif, and which was filed in the Court of a Subordinate Judge, it appeared that there had been an adjudication by District Munsif in a previous suit affecting the rights of the parties now in issue, and that the present claim was largely composed of interest. The Subordinate Judge having framed issues relating to the claim for interest and having tried them as preliminary issues, decided that the suit was within the pecuniary limits of the jurisdiction of a District Munsif, and that the claim had been unwarrantably exaggerated with a view to filing the suit in a superior Court, and so avoiding the plea of res judicata, and he thereupon returned the plaint to be presented in the proper Court. Held, that the procedure

20. _____ Valuation of plaint presented again after return of plaint—Return of plaint for want of jurisdiction—Second presentation under Court Fees Act, 1870—Act XXVI of 1867, Plaint presented under. Where a plaint in a suit was originally presented, when Act XXVI of 1867 was in force, in the Court of the Munsif, and, being above the amount for which that Court had jurisdiction, was returned for presentation to the Subordinate Judge, and when presented there it was admitted and heard and afterwards it was found that under Act VII of 1870, the Court Fees Act which was then in force, the lower standard of valuation necessary would have made it cognizable by the Munsif:—Held, that by analogy to the cases which decide that the date of a suit for the purposes of limitation is the date when the plaint was originally presented, the suit must be assumed to have been brought when the plaint was filed in the Munsif's Court, and therefore was properly valued under Act XXVI of 1867. 22. _____ Subordinate Judge's power to make valuation—Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), s. 7, cl. 4 (f)—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 54, cls. (a) and (b). The plaintiffs brought a suit for an account, and approximately valued their claim at R16,151-0. The Subordinate Judge was of opinion that the claim was for recovery of money, and should have been valued at R1,000. He therefore called on the plaintiffs to make up the stamp to that required on this valuation; and the plaintiffs refusing, he dismissed their suit under s. 54 (b) of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882). Held, that in any case the Subordinate Judge was wrong. If the suit was really one for an account, the plaintiffs were entitled to value the relief they sought approximately, as they had done; if it were not one for an account, but for recovery of money, still the Subordinate Judge had no power himself to value the relief sought, but should have called on the plaintiffs to value the relief they sought, and then if he had thought such relief was undervalued, he could have applied s. 54 (a) of the Code of Civil Procedure and rejected the suit. 23. _____ Suit for account and for balance that may be found due—Appeal—Act XIV of 1869, ss. 8 and 26. The plaintiffs sued for an account of all business done by the defendants as their commission agents from 1854 to 1867, and prayed that whatever was found due might be awarded with interest. The plaintiffs valued the relief sought approximately at R510, and this was the only valuation stated in the plaint. The suit was filed in the Court of a first class Subordinate Judge, who rejected the plaintiff's claim. Against this decision the plaintiffs preferred an appeal to the High Court. Held, that, as the approximate amount of the claim was stated in the plaint to be R510, that must be taken to be the value of the subject-matter of the suit for purposes of jurisdiction. The appeal, therefore, lay under ss. 8 and 26 of Act XIV of 1869, not to the High Court, but to the District Court. Under s. 50 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882), if a plaintiff seeks the recovery of money, the plaint must state the precise amount so far as the case admits, while in a suit for the amount which will be found due on taking unsettled accounts the plaint need only state approximately the amount sued for. As in the former instance the precise amount, so in the latter the approximate amount stated in the plaint must be taken to be the amount, of value of the subject-matter of the suit for purposes of jurisdiction. The valuation of the relief sought in such a suit rests with the plaintiff, and not with the Court. A sued B and C (1) for a declaration of his title to certain property, and (2) for an injunction restraining C from paying, and B from receiving, an allowance of R2,400 a year out of the income of the property in dispute. A valued each of the reliefs sought at R130, and affixed a Court-fee stamp of R20 to the plaint. —Bengal Civil Courts Act, ss. 20, 22. Certain co-sharers of a village sued to have a lease of certain land, the joint undivided property of the co-sharers, which the other co-sharers had granted, set aside, and to have the building erected on such land by the lessees demolished, on the ground that such lease had been granted without their consent. They valued the relief sought at R100. The value of the buildings of which they sought demolition was R3,000. B sued N claiming inter alia possession of certain land and to have certain buildings erected thereon by the defendant demolished. Held, with reference to the abovementioned suits, that in estimating their value for the purposes of the Court Fees Act, 1870, or of the Bengal Civil Courts Act, 1871, the value of the buildings which might have to be demolished should not be taken into account. This portion of the claim he valued, under cl. 2 of s. 7 of the Court Fees Act, at ten times the amount of the value claim for one year. The value of the claim thus stated exceeded the pecuniary limit of the jurisdiction of the District Munsif. The Subordinate Judge held that this portion of the claim was not actionable, inasmuch as the right to the emoluments was conditional upon services to be rendered, and did not fall under cl. 2 of s. 7 of the Court Fees Act, not being a fixed sum payable periodically, and therefore he held that the plaint was improperly valued, that the suit was not within his jurisdiction, and that the plaint should be returned to be presented to the proper Court. Held, that this order was right. 74. ——— Land, suit for—Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), s. 7, Art. 5, proviso—Stamp—Construction and applicability of the proviso—Valuation of suits for land in a talukhdari village—Talukhdar's jumma—Remission.—Per WEST and NANABHAI, JJ. The proviso to Art. 5 of s. 7 of the Court Fees Act (VII of 1870) was clearly intended to provide a standard of valuation in the Bombay Presidency, not only for the comparatively rare cases of land forming part but not a definite share of an estate paying revenue to Government, but for all cases of suits for land. The theory being that all land is primarily liable to be rated or taxed for the public revenue, any sum not levied according to the appraisement, made in order to show the proper amount of the land-tax may be regarded as a remission. In the case of a talukhdari village, the proprietor of which had, under a settlement with Government for a period of twenty-two years, agreed to pay a fixed annual jumma, or lump assessment instead of the full survey assessment for the whole village:—Held, by a majority of the Full Bench, that the difference in amount between the jumma and the full survey assessment was a remission, and therefore a suit for possession of lands in this village was to be valued according to cl. (3) of the proviso to Art. 5 of s. 7 of the Court Fees Act (VII 1870). Per BIRDWOOD, J.—The remission contemplated by cl. (3) of the proviso "is an express remission, and not a mere difference in amount between the actual assessment payable by a talukhdar and the survey assessment." The three clauses of the proviso seem to apply only to lands which have been subjected to a survey settlement as ordinarily understood and legally provided for in the Bombay Presidency; the first clause being applicable to lands settled for a period not exceeding thirty years, the second to lands settled for a longer period or permanently, and the third to inam lands on which the whole or a part of the survey assessment has been expressly remitted. The talukhdars are not inamdars. They are landholders liable to pay a land-tax, but not under a survey settlement, such as is applicable to lands for which provision seems to have been specially made in the proviso to Art. 5 of s. 7 of the Court Fees Act. No part of the proviso therefore applies to a suit for the possession of lands in a talukhdari village.

93. ——— Jurisdiction—Subject-matter of suit—Act XIV of 1869, s. 25. What primâ facie determines the jurisdiction of a Court is the claim, or subject-matter of the claim, as estimated by the plaintiff; and the determination having given the jurisdiction, the jurisdiction itself continuous, whatever the event of the suit. And this is so notwithstanding a bonâ fide error in the estimate made by the plaintiff, but plaintiff cannot oust the Court of its jurisdiction by making unwarrantable additions to the claim which cannot be sustained, and which there is no reasonable ground for expecting to sustain. The subject-matter of a claim, within the meaning of s. 25 of Act XIV of 1869, is the specific thing sought by the plaintiff. In a partition suit, where the plaintiff seeks for a division and separate possession of his share in joint property, it is the share so claimed which is the subject-matter of the claim, and not the whole of the joint property which is sought to be divided. The mortgagee set up as a defence to such suit that a bond, under which a sum exceeding R1,000 was due, had been tacked to the mortgage, and that, until such sum had been satisfied, the plaintiff could not recover possession of his share. Held, on the question whether the Munsif had jurisdiction, that the value of the subject-matter of the suit was the value of the mortgagee's right qua the plaintiff's share ; and as the value of such right did not exceed R1,000 even if it were held that the mortgaged property was further incumbered with such bond, such suit was cognizable in the Munsif's Court. (ix), of the Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), that the defendants mortgagees having brought up the equity of redemption of two of the mortgagors, and pro tanto extinguished their mortgage-debt and so by their own act empowered the plaintiff to sue for redemption of one-third of the property, the principal money now secured as between them and the plaintiff must now be regarded as one-third of the original mortgage amount,—namely, R1,333-5-4,—more particularly as fiscal enactments should, as far as possible, be construed in favour of the subject. Balkrishna Dhondo v. *Nagvekar, I. 120. ——— Dekkan Agriculturists' Relief Act (XVII of 1879), Ch. II, s. 3—Appeal—Jurisdiction. In a redemption-suit the valuation of the subject-matter does not depend on the value of the mortgaged property. Where the mortgage itself is denied, and the mortgagee does not say what he claims in respect of the mortgage-debt, the amount found to be remaining due on the mortgage, if any amount was due at the date of the suit, would represent the true valuation of the subject-matter of the suit. Rupchand Khemchand v. Balvant Narayan, I. L. R., 11 Bom. 591, followed. The plaintiffs, who were agriculturists, suit to redeem certain lands, alleging that they had been mortgaged to the defendants' father for R50, and that the debt had been satisfied out of the rent and profits of the mortgaged property. The defendants denied the alleged mortgage. The Subordinate Judge found that the mortgage was proved, and the mortgages-debt had been more than paid off out of the profits of the property in dispute. He therefore passed decree awarding possession to the plaintiffs. Against this decree the defendant appealed. The District Court found that the mortgage was not established and reversed the decree of the Subordinate Judge. Held, on second appeal, that no appeal lay to the District Court from the decision of the Subordinate Judge. As the Subordinate Judge found that no sum remained due on the mortgage, and as the original advance was alleged to have been R50, the suit was governed by the provisions of Ch. A person may rely on the invalidity of a void instrument as against himself without suing for its cancellation; and a suit by him for declaring the invalidity of such instrument will not be a suit for declaration and consequential relief under s. 7, paragraph IV, clause (c), of the Court Fees Act. 40. ——— Appeal in suit for redemption of usufructuary mortgage—Bengal Civil Courts Act (VI of 1871), s. 22. The plaintiffs sued for the possession of certain immoveable property, alleging that they had mortgaged such property to the defendants, and that the mortgage-debt had been satisfied out of the profits of the property. The defendants set up a defence to the suit which raised the question of the proprietary right of the plaintiffs to the property. The value of the mortgagees' interest in the property was below R5,000; the value of the mortgaged property exceeded that amount. On appeal to the High Court from the original decree of the Subordinate Judge in the suit, it was contended that the appeal from that decree lay to the District Court and not to the Hight Court. Held, that the "subject-matter in dispute," within the meaning of s. 22 of Act VI of 1871, was the mortgage and the mortgagees' rights under it, and that, the value of this being only R2,000, the appeal should have been preferred to the District Court. He applied to the Court for the removal of the obstruction, the property, which was the subject of the application, being valued at less than R5,000, and the Subordinate Judge directed that the application be registered as a regular suit under the Civil Procedure Code, s. 331, and ultimately passed a decree in favour of the plaintiff. Held, that the valuation of the appeal for the purpose of jurisdiction was to be taken as being less than R5,000, notwithstanding that the subject-matter of the original suit was valued above that sum, and that the appeal lay to the District Judge, and not to the High Court. In a suit for taking an account the plaint having contained several items which were all incidental to the chief item of relief, the plaint was held to be substantially one to have a minor plaintiff's estate administered, that is, to have accounts taken and the accounting party ordered to pay what (if any) should be found due from him on the balance of such account. The plaintiffs having put the valuation of the suit at R130 in the plaint :—Held, that the High Court had no jurisdiction to hear the appeal against an order rejecting the plaint. The Subordinate Judge passed a decree awarding to the plaintiffs a sum of R30,830-9-2. The plaintiffs thereupon paid an additional Court-fee of R900 under s. 11 of the Court Fees Act (VII of 1870). The defendants appealed to the High Court from the decree of the Subordinate Judge. The plaintiffs objected that the appeal lay to the District Judge, and not to the High Court. Held, that the value of the subject-matter of the suit exceeded R5,000 ; the appeal therefore lay to the High Court under s. 26 of Act XIV of 1896. The Subordinate Judge found that the property in suit was worth over a lakh of rupees, that the liabilities came to R5,729, and that the defendant was indebted to the estate in the sum of R5,199. He drew up a preliminary decree, directing (inter alia) that the defendant should pay this amount into Court within two weeks. Against this order the defendant appealed to the District Court. The plaintiffs obtained a decree, against which the defendant appealed to the District Court. While the appeal was pending, the District Judge, holding that the Court-fee paid on the plaint was insufficient, ordered that the plaintiffs should pay the balance due on an ad valorem computation of the fee, and in default, that the suit should stand dismissed. The plaintiffs first became aware of this order on the 26th March ; the balance was not paid within the time fixed by the District Judge for the payment to be made, and on the 28th March he accordingly made an order dismissing the suit. Held, that the plaint was sufficiently stamped, and that, in any case, the order dismissing the suit while the appeal was still pending was irregular. He subsequently referred the appeal for disposal to a Subordinate Judge, who accordingly passed a decree, allowing the appeal of defendant 4 with costs. In a suit of the description mentioned in s. 8 of Act VII of 1887, the plaintiff valued his claim at R664 for the computation of Court-fees, and at R14,000 for purposes of jurisdiction. Held, that the appeal from the decree of the Court of first instance lay to the District Court, and not to the High Court. The plaintiffs appealed only against the order refusing the declaration, the memorandum of appeal bearing a Court-fee stamp of R10. The respondent objected that the declaration asked for in appeal involved consequential relief, and that an ad valorem fee was payable by the appellant. Held, that the memorandum was correctly stamped under s. 16 and cl. iii, Art. 17, Sch. The appeal was dismissed by the Special Judge, on the ground that as many Court-fees of R10 each as there were tenants defendants had not been paid and the appellants petitioned the High Court to set aside the order under s. 622 of the Civil Procedure Code. Held, by a Full Bench, that the Local Government acted within the powers conferred by s. 189, cl. 1, of the Bengal Tenancy Act in making rule 25 of Ch. VI of the Government rules under the Act by which the landlord was authorised to join as defendants several defendants in one application for settlement of rents. Held, also, that the decision of the Special Judge did not dispose of any question relating to valuation, far less of any question relating to the valuation of a suit, and the decision was not final under s. 12 of the Court Fees Act; and that the proceedings in this case could not properly be regarded as a suit and neither Art. 17, cl. vi, of Sch. II nor s. 17 of the Court Court Fees Act, was applicable. The memorandum of appeal was nothing more or less than an application subject to one Court-fee of eight annas only under Art. 1, cl. The decree in the suit, passed on the 14th September 1887, granted both the declarations played for. The defendants appealed to the High Court against the whole decree and stamped their memorandum of appeal with a stamp of R10 only. On the 9th November 1887 it was tendered to a Judge for admission, and it then bore a report dated the 7th November by the officer appointed under s. 5 of the Court Fees Act, "Report will be made on receipt of record." The Judge made an order, "Admit, subject to stamp report," and the memorandum was then received by the office, and the appeal was entered on the register. On the 27th September 1888 the office reported that there was a deficiency in the stamp of R615; on the 9th November the taxing officer ordered that the deficiency should be made good; and on the 8th December 1888 it was made good. At the hearing of the appeal a preliminary objection was taken that the appeal had never been validly presented within time, or admitted, and that it could not be heard. Held, that there was before the Court no valid appeal as to the merits of which the Court could give a decision. Held, also, that the stamp of R10 was insufficient, inasmuch as two distinct declarations were asked for and obtained, and were by the appeal sought to be set aside; and it was not the province of the taxing officer or of the Judge or Court on a question of the sufficiency of a stamp or fee to consider whether a plaintiff or an appellant was asking for more declarations or reliefs than were required for his protection. foreclosure, preferred an appeal against the decree for foreclosure made in the suit, the amount found due on the mortgage being over a lakh of rupees:—Held (for the purpose of ascertaining the Court-fee payable on the memorandum of appeal) that the value of the property affected by the decree must be taken to be R2,500, being the amount for which the appellant had purchased the property. Venkappa v. *Narasimha, I. By a bond, being on the face of it an ordinary bond, the obligor agreed to repay the debt and admitted that, if he failed to do so, the obligee would be entitled to recover the debt by sale of a certain factory belonging to him and from his person and other properties, and that the property referred to in the bond will be held Paibandh for the debt. Held, that the bond created no special lien on the factory, and that the circumstance that the bond was registered as an agreement in Book I and that the obligee took no steps to have it registered as a mortgage was evidence that the parties intended to treat it as an agreement rather than as a mortgage. Najibulla Mulla v. Nusir Mistri, I. L. R. 7 Calc. 196, referred to. Plaintiffs paid out of their own funds the amount due under a mortgage-bond payable by five annual instalments, the first of which was due on the 15th January, 1895, and the last on the 15th January 1899, executed by C on the 8th April 1894, mortgaging his Indigo Concern and the mortgagee on the 7th November 1899, after the payment of the last instalment, executed at C's request an assignment of the mortgage in their favour. On the 21st December 1895, C being indebted to the plaintiffs in a large amount recoverable only out of the produce of the factory had executed in their favour an agreement to give them a first mortgage on the concern and certain other properties, and on the 13th November 1896 C executed two other deeds creating in their favour a valid charge on the said concern and certain other properties. Held, that, although there was no direct evidence of any formal bargain or agreement, the presumption was that the plaintiffs, when they paid off the instalments due under the mortgage of the 8th April 1894, intended that the mortgage should be kept alive for their benefit and that in itself entitled them to come in as first mortgagee. Held, further, that under the agreement of the 21st December 1895, which created an equitable mortgage, and under the two deeds of the 13th November 1896 the plaintiffs were in the position of puisne mortgagees and when thereafter they paid off the last three instalments due to the first mortgagee, they were entitled to come in by subrogation as first mortgagee, and further that, the mortgage having been kept alive, the assignment to them under C's direction gave them all the rights, which the mortgagee had. Whether a mortgage paid off has been kept alive or extinguished depends on the intention of the parties, the mere fact that it has been paid off not deciding the question. Gokaldas Gopaldas v. *Puranmal Premsukhdas, I. 7. ——— Raising issues after variance is shown. A plaintiff will not be allowed to set up one case, and, having proved another, to ask for issues to be raised to suit the proof; but when a plaint and its proof necessarily lead to one or more particular issues, it is the duty of the Court, if these issues do not come by surprise on the defendant, to raise such issues, and to give the relief thereon to which the plaintiff is entitled. 16. ——— Failure to establish case set up—Practice—Pleadings—Failure of plaintiff to establish case set up by him—Right to succeed upon facts found differing from those alleged. The plaintiff sued the defendant alleging that the defendant was tenant of a certain house belonging to the plaintiff, that the tenancy had commenced some eleven years before suit, and that the defendant had for the last three years ceased to pay rent, and had recently denied the plaintiff's title. The defendant denied that the plaintiff was the owner of the house, or that he had leased it to the defendant. He pleaded also that he had been in adverse possession for more than twelve years. The plaintiff failed to prove the allegation of tenancy set up by him, and it was not shown that the plaintiff had been in possession within a period of twelve years from the institution of the suit. Held, that, under the circumstances stated above, it being, on the failure of the plaintiff's case as to tenancy, for the plaintiff to prove that he had possession within twelve years, the plaintiff was not entitled to a decree. Naiku Khan v. *Gayani Kuar, I. that he was the proprietor of a certain building, and (ii) that he had leased a part of the said building to the defendant, who, however, refused to pay the rent agreed upon, and he sought to have the defendant ejected, and to recover possession of the portion of the building occupied by him. No specific issue dealing with the plaintiff's title was framed, but evidence as to title was given on both sides. Held, that, even though the plaintiff had failed to make out his case as to the letting, he nevertheless should get a decree on his title, unless the defendant could show a better one. The fact that no distinct issue as to the plaintiff's title had been framed could not be construed to the prejudice of the plaintiff, inasmuch as the issue had in fact been tried, and it could not be said that the defendant had been in any way taken by surprise. Adul Gani v. *Babni, All. to which the accretion is made, following the ownership of that land, the rule is equally well established in both those provinces. Both parties were riparian proprietors of adjoining estates on both banks of the river Godavari. The plaintiff claimed the right to newly-formed land, in midstream, which she alleged to have been formed by accretion upon an already existing lanka or alluvial island which belonged to her. On that point there were concurrent findings against her. The accretion had taken place upon a lanka owned, not by her but by the Government, and higher up stream than hers. Held, that the plaintiff must abide by the ground of claim which she had presented below, that being that the new land was formed by gradual accretions to definite and visible portions of a lanka previously belonging to her. This she could not now vary to a claim founded on an ownership of the river-bed on the strength of her being zamindar and owner of the land on both banks of the river, without either issue or evidence directed to such sub-aqueous ownership. 3. ——— Alienation, suit to set aside—Variance between case in plaint and evidence—Raising ground not taken in plaint. The plaintiff a Hindu, sued to set aside a certain alienation, on the ground that the alinor was an illegitimate son of the plaintiff's grandfather, and, therefore, had no interest in the property. Not being able to substantiate this ground in the first Court, the plaintiff, on appeal, raised a new ground, viz., that the alienation was bad, because under the Mitakshara law the owner of a share in a joint ancestral estate is not competent to alienate his share without the consent of the other heirs. Held, that such variance could not be allowed, and that the plaintiff must prove his case as laid in the plaint. 4. ——— Alleged inconsistency in pleadings—Construction of solehnama—Estoppel—Objection taken for first time on appeal. After the death of a Hindu widow, a suit was brought to have a sale of a portion of her husband's estate made by her set aside on the ground that the sale was invalid except in so far as it affected the rights of the widow herself therein. The plaintiff, who was a collateral relation, alleged himself to be the heir, and sued as such, but was not so in fact. It appeared, however, that a solehnama had been entered into between him and the heir by virtue of which he had acquired all the rights of the heir in the property in suit. It did not appear that any objection had beent aken in the lower Courts to the framing of the suit on the ground that the plaintiff was not the heir, and the defendant was allowed to raise the same objection to the suit as he might have taken had it been brought by the heir. On appeal it was contended on behalf of the defendant that the plaintiff, having sued as heir, could not be allowed to succeed on the basis of the solehnama, as this would be contrary to the rule laid down in Eshan Chunder Singh v. Shama Churn Bhutto, 11 Moo, I. A. 7. Held, that, if this objection had been taken in the first Court, the plaint and issues might and ought to have been amended, but as it was not so taken, and the substance of the case in the plaint was that sale by the widow was invalid beyond her own interest, under the circumstances of the case there was no weight in the contention of the appellant. 9. ———— Issues—Amendment of plaint—Variance between case in plaint and evidence. The plaintiffs sued the defendants for damages for breach of contract, alleging in their plaint that they had agreed to sell, and the defendants to purchase, certain indigo seed, but that the defendants had refused to take delivery, although the plaintiffs were ready and willing to deliver the same. Upon the evidence of the plaintiffs, it appeared that there was no contract as alleged in the plaint, but the contract, as stated by them, was that they (the plaintiffs) were to purchase seeds as agents for the defendants. The Judge dismissed the suit on the ground that the plaintiffs were bound to prove their case as stated in the plaint. Held, that the suit ought not to have been dismissed on that ground. The issues raised admitted of the true question being tried, viz., whether, under the circumstances, the defendants were liable to pay the price of the seed ; and if they did not, the Court ought to have amended the issues, or framed additional ones. The object of the plaint is merely to bring the matter in dispute before the Court, but it is for the Court, upon the statements before it, to determine the real issue between the parties. A plaintiff must be limited to the case which he puts forward in his plaint, but he may put forward an alternative case in his plaint from the commencement, as the defendant then will know that he has more than one case to meet, and will not be taken by surprise. The Court of first instance having found her allegations of tenancy to be untrue, she then in appeal endeavoured to support a plea that the defendants were trespassers, such plea having formed no part of the original case. Held, that the plaintiff could not under the circumstances be heard in support of a new plea of which the defendants had had no notice until the case was in appeal. Lakshmibai v. Hari bin Raoji, 9 Bom. 1, referred to. Part of a sum of money, paid to the credit of the insolvent's estate in pursuance of the compromise, was made over upon the passing of the consent-decree, with the knowledge of the assignee, but without notice to, or the sanction of, the Court, to a person who had assisted in taking the account. From the representatives of the latter, he being now deceased, the successor in office of the assignee claimed repayment. The plaint, as presented, alleged the fraudulent concealment of the payment from the assignee. Afterwards when all the evidence had been taken, and it had been established that the assignee knew of the payment, this was amended to the statement that, if he did know of it, he had no power to consent to it, and that his consent would not be binding, the payment being a fraud upon the Court. Held, that the amendment at the stage when it was made was not permissible. It is a well-known rule that a charge of fraud must be substantially proved as laid, and that, when one kind of fraud is charged, another kind cannot, on failure of proof, be substituted for it. The Principal Sudder Ameen made a decree for the restoration of the lands according to the terms of the mortgage produced by the defendants. 19. ——— Suit for redemption—Evidence given of other mortgage than the mortgage in respect of which suit brought—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 35—Statement of a survey officer as to entry as occupant how far admissible. The plaintiff sued to redeem certain lands alleged to have be mortgaged by his ancestor to the ancestors of the defendants in 1823. At the hearing the deed of mortgage in respect of which the suit was brought was produced, but another mortgage of about the same date was produced and proved by the plaintiff. The lower Courts passed a decree for the plaintiff. The defendants appealed. Held (reversing the decree of the lower Courts), that where a particular instrument is sued on as the basis of a right, it is incumbent on the plaintiff to establish his case on that particular cause of action, not on a cause of action, merely bearing the same common name, or of the same description, and so included in the same class. Under s. 35 of the Evidence Act, I of 1872, a statement by the survey officer that the name of this or that person was entered as occupant would be admissible if relevant, but it would not be admissible to prove the reasons for such an entry as facts in another case. The defendant admitted the mortgage but alleged that it was made in A.D. 1791 for R110 and contended that the suit was barred by limitation. The Subordinate Judge held that the mortgage had been made for the amount and at the date alleged by the defendant, but that the suit was not time-barred, as the mortgagor's title had been acknowledged by the mortgagee within the period of limitation. He accordingly made a decree for redemption on terms consistent with the plea of the defendant, but opposed to that of the plaintiff. On appeal, the Assistant Judge agreed with the first Court as to the merits of the case, but reversed its decree on the ground that the plaintiff was not entitled to succeed on a state of facts inconsistent with the case set forth in the plaint, observing that a plaintiff ought not to be allowed to change his cause of action. Held by the High Court, on second appeal, that the decree made by the first Court in favour of the plaintiff did not in any way proceed upon a cause of action different from that made in the plaint, and that the cause of action remained the same, namely, the right of the mortgagor to redeem from a mortgagee. A plaintiff ought not to be allowed to alter his case so as to convert a suit of one character into a suit of another and inconsistent character. LAKSHMAN BHISAJEE v. HARI DINKAR DESAI I. L. 21. ——— Alteration of case from that made in plaint. Upon a mortgage of land made little less than sixty years before the present suit, a decree followed in 1825 to the effect that an account having been taken of what was due on the mortgage, the mortgagor might at any time make a tender of such mortgage-money with interest up to date, and require that the land should be restored. The plaintiff, representing the interest of the original mortgagor, sued for redemption of the mortgage, treating the above decree as regulating the rights of the parties from the time when it was made. Held, that the plaintiff, not having sought by his plaint to redeem the mortgage, or alleged that there had been acknowledgment, could not in the present appeal fall back on a right to redeem such mortgage, although the latter might be within limitation, as that would be to make a case different from the one tried and decided in the Courts below. He alleged a mortgage, dated A.D. 1849, for R175. The defendants admitted a mortgage, but alleged that it was executed at a different time and for a larger sum. After the evidence was given, but before the judgment was delivered, the plaintiff applied to amend the plaint and to set up the mortgage admitted by the defendants. His application was refused, and the Court dismissed the suit on the ground that he had failed to prove the particular mortgage alleged in the plaint. The District Judge confirmed the decree, but observed

23. ——— Cause of action set out in plaint—Burden of proof—Civil Procedure Code, 1882, s. 50—Suit for redemption of mortgage. A plaintiff is only entitled to succeed upon the cause of action alleged by him in his plaint. So, where plaintiffs came into Court alleging a mortgage of the year 1854 made by their predecessor in title in favour of the defendant and seeking to redeem the mortgage of 1854, and it was found that the plaintiffs had failed to prove the mortgage of 1854, it was held that the plaintiffs were not entitled in that suit to a decree for redemption of other mortgages which might be found to subsist between the parties, but which formed no part of the cause of action upon which the plaintiffs came into Court. Read v. *Brown, L. The kanom was not proved, but it appeared that the defendants in possession had in various documents admitted that they were kanomdars under the plaintiff's predecessor in title. The Subordinate Judge held that the kanom to which the admissions related could not have been executed before 1823, which was less than sixty years from the date of some of the admissions, and he passed a decree for redemption. Held, that the plaintiff, having failed to establish the kanom on which the suit was based, should not have been allowed to fall back upon some other as to which the defendants had made the admissions in question. The property was not hypothecated as security for the mortgage-money. Held, that it was inequitable to dismiss the suit for that reason, the defendant having been guilty of a breach of the contract of mortgage, for which the plaintiff was entitled to compensation; that although the plaintiff did not expressly claim such relief, yet, regard being had to the pleadings and evidence in the case, the suit might be treated as one for such relief; and that on estimating the compensation which should be awarded, the principal mortgage-money with interest at the rate specified in the contract of mortgage might fairly be taken as a reasonable guide. ment of mortgage provided that the mortgagors should deliver possession of the mortgaged property to the mortgagee, and the latter should retain possession, setting off profits against interest, until the former should redeem, by payment of the principal sum, which they were at liberty to do in the month of Jaith in any year they pleased. The mortgagors having failed to deliver possession of the mortgaged property, the mortgagee sued them for the principal sum and interest, asking for enforcement of lien. The instrument of mortgage did not contain any hypothecation of the property. Held, that, although the suit, so far as it sought enforcement of lien wholly failed, there being no hypothecation of the property, yet it was not equitable or proper that as regards the money-claim, the mortgagee should be relegated to a fresh suit, inasmuch as a cause of action was disclosed, whether the suit was regarded as one for compensation in damages for breach of contract, or for money had and received for the plaintiff's use, or for money lent, and the suit should be determined on its merits. This plea was put in issue in the first Court, which found that some papers had been delivered as alleged, and made a decree ordering the delivery of certain other of the papers. On appeal the attention of the Judge was principally directed to the point whether the receipt of the papers by the plaintiff's son was a receipt by him as plaintiff's agent. Held, that this point was a departure wholly from the case made below, and ought not to have been entertained on appeal. The Court of first instance found that he had not proved the title he alleged, and although it had been contended at the hearing that a title by twelve years' adverse possession had been proved, the Court held that it was not proved, and that, as it was not alleged in the plaint and no issue was raised as to it, the plaintiff was not entitled to succeed, and accordingly dismissed the suit. The plaintiff appealed, and one of his grounds of appeal was that he was entitled to succeed by virtue of the title of adverse possession proved. The lower Appellate Court considered that the plaintiff had proved that he and his vendor had held adverse possession for a period of over twelve years and gave the plaintiff a decree on the strength of that title. The defendant appealed to the High Court, and it was contended on his behalf that the plaintiff was not entitled to succeed upon a title of adverse possession when it was not alleged in his plaint, and no issue had been laid down in respect of it. Held, that, as the suit was one for possession, and the defendant had express notice in the lower Appellate Court that the plaintiff relied on the title of adverse possession, and as he took no objection, on the ground that he should be allowed an opportunity to call evidence to rebut it, and as he had consequently not been prejudiced by the course adopted by the lower Appellate Court, the decree of that Court should be confirmed. Bijoya Debia v. *Bydonath Deb, 24 W. 39. ——— Relief granted on a different ground from that asked for. Plaintiff's suit was that they were co-owners with B of a certain property as members of a joint family under the Mitakshara law; that after B's death a 3½ annas share of the property was registered under the Land Registration Act in the name of A, the mother of B, although the plaintiffs were the owners in possession, and A was entitled only to maintenance; that a gift was made of 1½ annas share by A to her daughter and daughter's son, without right, and the donees having granted a zur-i-peshgi lease in respect of that share, the zur-i-peshgidars took possession thereof. The plaintiffs accordingly prayed for recovery of possession by establishment of their alleged right of ownership, or, in the alternative, for a declaration that they were reversionary heirs to the estate of B, and as such not bound by the gift and the zur-i-peshgi lease aforesaid. A died during the pendency of the suit. It was found that plaintiffs were not co-owners with B as alleged; but that, as reversionary heirs, they became entitled to possession upon A's death after the institution of the suit. Held, that, as the plaintiffs had claimed to recover possession in the suit, and as A died before the case was taken up for trial, the plaintiffs were entitled to the relief, although they asked it on a ground different from that on which they recovered judgment. The Court of first instance found that the plaintiff's allegation of possession was false, and dismissed the suit. Held, on appeal, that the suit was rightly dismissed, for though a plaintiff who brings forward a bonâ fide case, which he proves in substance, though not in form, would be assisted by the Court, in the absence of such special circumstances no such assistance would be afforded. Subsequently he ousted the plaintiff from certain lands, and hence the suit by the plaintiff for recovery of possession thereof, on the ground that the property in dispute was a lakhiraj tenure created by the Raja of Tippera, and that the plaintiff was owner thereof, partly by purchase and partly by inheritance. The lower Appellate Court found as a fact that the late shikmidar, and not the Raja, had granted the lands in dispute as bramatar, but not in favour of the person through whom the plaintiff claimed. The Court, however, passed a decree in favour of the plaintiff, as he had been unlawfully dispossessed. Held, that the plaintiff, having failed to prove the case as set up by him and upon which he claimed, could not be entitled to a decree upon grounds other than those stated in the plaint. 66. ——— Suit for declaratory decree—Suit under Bengal Rent Act, 1869. Where the plaintiff sued under Bengal Act VIII of 1869 for a declaration that certain land was mâl, as well as for assessment of rent thereon and for arrears of rent at the rate assessed, and the suit was dismissed, and on appeal the plaintiff abandoned the two last points in his claim and asked merely for a declaratory decree:—Held, that the lower Appellate Court ought, notwithstanding the plaintiff had elected to sue under the Rent Act to have proceeded with that part of the case, and disposed of the appeal as to that only. 68. ——— Suit for rent—Failure to prove kabuliat. The plaintiff, having sued for rent upon a kabuliat and failed to prove it, is not entitled to a decree if he shows that the defendants had paid him rent for a number of years, the Court observing that it would not be the exercise of a sound discretion to allow a party who relies upon a document to set up a fresh case when an issue as to the execution of such document is found against him, and there are good reasons for believing that the document is not genuine. 69. ——— Suit for pottah at fixed rate of rent—Failure in proof. In a suit brought by a raiyat to obtain a pottah at a fixed rent under s. 3 of Act X of 1859, on the ground that the lands had been held at a fixed rent which has not been changed from the time of the permanent settlement, if the plaintiff fail in proving such a holding, he is not entitled in that suit to have a decree under s. 5 for a pottah at a fair and equitable rate. DOORGA MAHTOON v. KANHYE LALL AJHA . . . Marsh. 371 : 2 Hay 422

70. ——— Suit on kabuliat which plaintiff fails to prove. Plaintiff sued upon a kabuliat, and filed a pottah in support of it. The pottah having been rejected, and the kabuliat not proved, he was held not entitled to fall back on a general statement that he has a jote pottah ; that the lands in dispute are part of the same ; and that he can oust the defendant, who was duly in possession. GOBIND CHUNDER LAHORY v. JARDINE, SKINNER & CO. . . . 7 W. R. 163

71. ——— Failure to prove right to pottah—Right to have fair and equitable rate of rent fixed as occupancy raiyats. The plaintiffs sued as raiyats to obtain a pottah corresponding with a kabuliat which they said had been taken from them by the defendants, who were 12-anna shareholders in the land, and, according to an alleged promise, to give them a pottah. The plaintiffs failed to make out the ground on which they relied, but the lower Appellate Court, being of opinion that the plaintiffs had made out a right of occupancy under the rent law and were entitled to obtain a pottah from the zamindar at a fair and equitable rate of rent, and finding no evidence as to what such a rate would be, gave them a decree at the old rate. Held, that the decision was erroneous, as there was no evidence on which the question of a fair and equitable rate could be determined, and as it rested on a ground not taken by the plaintiffs, who came into Court on a special contract. If the plaintiffs' right to a pottah had rested on the ground of their being occupancy raiyats, they might claim a pottah from all the 16-anna shareholders, who ought to have been made parties and the case remanded for trial by the first Court. UTHUR HOSSEIN v. RAMPHAL ROY . 20 W. R. 75

72. ——— Suit for rent—Failure to prove kabuliat. Where a landlord sued a raiyat for arrears of rent alleged to be due under a kabuliat, and the Court found that such kabuliat had not been executed by the raiyat, although he had occupied the land, the landlord was held not entitled to have a further trial of the question whether any and what amount of rent was due on account of the raiyat's occupation of the land. 75. ——— Suit for enhancement of rent—Statements in plaint. Although in a suit for enhancement the plaintiff should not be tied down too strictly to his statements, yet he must to some extent be limited to the case made in the plaint. BONOMALEE CHURN MYTEE v. SHOROOP HOOTAIT . 14 W. R. 60

76. ——— Suit for enhancement of rent—Failure to prove rent as claimed. If the plaintiff is unable to show that he is entitled to the rent exactly as he claims it, the Court is not debarred from giving him a decree for such enhanced rent as it thinks ought to be paid, e.g., to divide the land into different classes and assign a separate rental to each description. which his claim arose, as well as the amount of that claim. Thus, where a plaintiff allowed the Court below to decide the case as if his contention was an ordinary case between a landlord suing to enhance and a tenant resisting his claim, and the statement of the defendant divulged the material circumstances of the case that the plaintiff's estate was let in farm, the High Court refused to allow the plaintiff on appeal to rest upon an alleged stipulation in a farming lease, the existence of which he altogether suppressed in the Court below, reserving to him the right of collecting from the tenantry an enhanced rent during the currency of the farming lease. 79. ——— Right of suit—Cause of action not shown in plaint, but proved in course of case. Where a plaintiff brought a suit for confirmation of his title to an estate, in consequence of the opposition offered by defendant to an application for partition by a vendee who had purchased a portion of plaintiff's share and the Court of first instance tried the case on its merits and gave the plaintiff a decree:—Held, that the lower Appellate Court was not justified in reversing the decision of the first Court on the ground that no cause of action had been disclosed, because, although the plaint itself disclosed no cause of action, yet, on the trial of the suit on its merits, a cause of action had been disclosed in the opposition which defendant had offered to the partition proceedings, and which had interfered with the enjoyment of his rights by the plaintiff. LALLAH MAHTAB ROY v. DEBEE DUTT SINGH . . . . . 25 W. R. 204

83. ——— Failure to prove adoption—Right to succeed by inheritance—Civil Procedure Code, s. 146—Failure of plaintiff to prove unnecessary averments—Decree on admission of defendant. In a suit brought by an undivided member of a Hindu family to set aside a sale made by the managing member and to recover a moiety of the land sold, the plaintiff alleged that he had been adopted by his deceased uncle and claimed as adopted son. The purchaser denied the adoption, alleged that plaintiff was the natural brother of the vendor, and justified the sale under Hindu law. The lower Courts found that the adoption was not proved, and, of the plaintiff urging that if the adoption was not proved, yet he was entitled to recover by virtue on the admission that he was the natural brother of the vendor, held that the latter claim was inconsistent with the claim as adopted son. The suit was therefore dismissed. Held, on appeal, that the suit was improperly dismissed, and that, if the purchaser could not justify the sale, the plaintiff was entitled to succeed. The rule that the decree should be in accordance with what is alleged and proved is intended to prevent surprise, and is not applicable to a case in which the defendant's own admission is adopted as the ground of decision against him. APPAYYA v. RAMIREDDI I. L. R. 11 Mad. 367

84. ——— Title of separate acquisition by purchase—Setting up inconsistent title by joint purchase. The plaintiff, having set up a title by sole purchase, was held not at liberty to change his case entirely, and to come in and set up another and inconsistent title, founded on inheritance or joint purchase. DOSS RAM DOSS v. MOHENDRA ROY DECHA . 18 W. R. 274

85. ——— Allegation of title by purchase—Failure to prove alleged title—Possession, title by. In a suit for declaration of title to and possession of certain property on the allegation of purchase and subsequent forcible ouster it was held that the plaintiff, having failed to prove the purchase or the forcible dispossession, could not succeed on mere proof of twenty years' possession. 87. ——— Failure to prove particular title—Title by right of occupancy—Act X of 1859, s. 6. In a suit for possession of land after purchase, where defendant pleaded that he had long held under a miras pottah which both the Courts below found to be false :—Held, that the defendant could not be allowed in special appeal to come in for the first time with an allegation of a new and separate title, viz., a right of occupancy under s. 6 Act X of 1859. SOORJO KOOMAR v. GUNGADHUR ROY . . . 12 W. R. 80

88. ——— Failure to prove specific title—Title by possession—Form of plaint. Where a plaintiff who fails to prove a specific title which he sets up, yet causes it to appear that he has had a clear bonâ fide possession from which the Court can infer a good title, the Court will not shut him out in consequence of the mere form of the plaint. KYLASH KAMINEE DOSSIA v. JUDOO BASHINEE DOSSIA . . . 22 W. R. 391

89. ——— Allegation of mokurari right and failure to prove it. In a suit to recover possession of land which defendant alleged himself to have held for more than twelve years under a mokurari lease, where the lower Appellate Court, finding that defendant failed to prove his mokurari right, declared he had no title to hold as a squatter :—Held, that, notwithstanding the failure of the defendant to prove his mokurari lease, the lower Court ought to have found what was the nature of the occupancy, and how long it had subsisted. JORAWUR SINGH v. KHYRAT ALI 10 W. R. 360

90. ——— Suit in one capacity, proof of right to succeed in another. A suit was brought by a Hindu widow to recover her share as heiress to her husband, in certain family property, of which she claimed a portion in her absolute right, and a portion as one of the joint shebaits of certain idols. Among other properties plaintiff claimed one-fifth share in a talukh, not as a debutter property, but, in right of her husband, as her absolute property. The first Court found that this share was the property of a certain idol, and held that she had not maintained the allegation in her plaint, and even if entitled to it in her right of joint shebait, she could not recover in that capacity, as she had not framed her plaint in that way and had not sued as shebait. The Privy Council held the High Court to be right in treating this objection as one rather of form than of substance, and in giving the relief prayed for. RADHA MOHUN MUNDUL v. JADOOMONEE DOSSEE 23 W. R. P. C. 369

91. ——— Amendment of plaint—Alternative relief—Ejectment suit—Failure to prove lease—General title. Where, in an action of ejectment against a tenant holding over the lease sued on was inadmissible in evidence for want of registration, and the plaint was not amended to one containing an alternative claim for partition :—Held, that the plaintiff could not be allowed to fall back upon his general title and obtain a decree for partition. 92. ——— Right to easement in suit for right of ownership—Decision on case not made in pleadings. In a suit brought to establish a right of ownership over certain land :—Held, it was not competent to the Court to enter into and decide upon the plaintiff's right to an easement over the same. A question not raised by the plaint ought not to be decided by the Court. LALJI RATANJI v. GANGARAM TULJARAM 2 Bom. 184 : 2nd Ed. 176

93. ——— Title by prescription—Making case different from that in plaint. In a suit for the removal of a pucca building recently erected by defendant upon land lying between the premises of the two parties to the dispute, where plaintiff's claim to use the land had been put upon his title as owner :—Held, that, having failed to make out the case originally set forth in the plaint, plaintiff had no right to fall back upon a title by prescription. BHOOBUN MOHUN MUNDUL v. RASH BEHAREE PAUL . . . 15 W. R. 84

94. ——— Suit by decreeholder to declare a house subject to attachment in execution as being the property of the judgment-debtor—Decree for plaintiff on ground that judgment-debtor, though not the owner of the house, had an attachable interest in it as permanent tenant—New case made on appeal. The plaintiff's case being that a certain house was the absolute property of his judgment-debtor, and that therefore he (the plaintiff) was entitled to attach it in execution of his decree, the Subordinate Judge found that the judgment-debtor was not the owner of the house, and rejected the plaintiff's claim. The Appellate Court held that (though the judgment-debtor was not the owner) he had an attachable interest in the house as permanent tenant, and allowed the plaintiff's claim. On appeal to the High Court by the defendant :—Held, that the order of the Appellate Court made out an entirely new case for the plaintiff which he had not made himself at any period of the trial, and that the decree of the lower Appellate Court should not be reversed. 95. ——— Possession, suit for—Practice—Pleadings—Failure of plaintiff to prove the case set up by him in his plaint—Right to succeed upon a case different from that alleged. The plaintiff came into Court alleging that the defendant had, about eight years previously, hired a house from him at a monthly rent of one rupee, but latterly had failed to pay the rent, and that the plaintiff had given the defendant notice to quit the house. The plaintiff claimed possession and damages, but not arrears of rent. The defendant denied the tenancy alleged by the plaintiff, and asserted that she had been in adverse possession for a period of seventeen years. She also asserted that she had purchased the land upon which the house stood, and had herself built the house. The findings in first appeal of the Court below, after remand of issues by the High Court, were, that the plaintiff was the owner of the house, and that the defendant occupied the house as a friend, with the permission of the plaintiff; that the defendant had never before this asserted her title to the house, and that her possession was permissive. Held, that plaintiff was entitled, upon the facts found, to a decree for possession, notwithstanding that his case had been that the defendant was his tenant. Bajrang Das v. *Nund Lal, All. 1. ———— Suit for rent—Failure to prove jummabundi—Form of decree. The plaintiff sued for rent at R22 a year on a jummabundi which he alleged was signed by all the raiyats when he came into possession; the defendant denied that he was a party to the jummabundi, but admitted, that he held some portion of the land as tenant of the plaintiff at a yearly rent of R5, and that the balance due by him to the plaintiff was R5-15. The plaintiff failed to prove the jummabundi. Held, that the plaintiff must, if he accepted the admission of the defendant at all, accept it as a whole and was therefore only entitled to a decree for R5-15, and not to a decree for all the years for which he claimed rent at R4-13 per annum. 4. ———— Suit for arrears of rent—Failure to prove rate—Decree at admitted rate. In a suit for arrears of rent, where the plaintiff fails to prove the rate of rent claimed in the plaint, it is the duty of the Court to find the proper rate of rent payable by the tenant to his landlord, and not to give a decree merely for the rent admitted by the tenant. 5. ———— Suit on new agreement—Failure to prove agreement—Decree at admitted rate. The defendant held lands under the plaintiff at a certain rate per bigha. The plaintiff brought a suit for arrears of rent on a new agreement alleged to have been entered into by the plaintiff and the defendant, whereby the latter agreed to pay a higher rate per bigha. The lower Appellate Court found that the new agreement had never, in fact, been entered into, and gave a decree for the old rate of rent without going into the question whether it was a fair rent or not. Held, that the decision was correct. 6. ———— Failure to prove rent in kind—Failure to prove case—Decree on admission of defendant for money rent. In a suit for arrears of rent, as bhowli rent, where the plaintiff failed to make out his title to bhowli rent or rent in kind, the first Court, finding that the evidence established a commutation of bhowli rent into rent in money, dismissed the suit with a reservation of the plaintiff's right to sue again for nagdi rent. The lower Appellate Court, agreeing in the first Court's view of the facts, and finding that the defendant admitted that he owed rent in money, decreed the claim to the extent of the admission. Held, that the lower Appellate Court was right, and that the reservation of right by the first Court was of doubtful operation. 8. ——— Suit for ejectment—Entry under unregistered lease—Holding over—Landlord and tenant—Proof of terms of lease—Decree for rent upon admission of different tenure by defendant. The plaintiff sued in 1881 to recover certain land and arrears of rent from the defendant, alleging that the defendants' ancestor entered on the land as tenant in 1865, under a lease for five years, which was not registered. The defendant denied the lease of 1865, admitted that she was the tenant of the land, but denied that she could be ejected, and claimed to deduct from the rent certain emoluments. Held, (i) that the plaintiff could not prove the tenancy alleged in the plaint, inasmuch as the lease of 1865 was not registered, and therefore could not eject the defendant; (ii) that the plaintiff was entitled, upon the defendant's admission, to recover from the defendant, in this suit, the amount of rent admitted to be due, and no more. 1. BILLS OF SALE.

1. ——— Effect of execution of bill of sale without delivery—Specific performance. It is very questionable in any case whether the effect of the execution of a bill of sale by a Hindu vendor is to pass an estate, irrespective of the actual delivery of possession. Where the vendor sells an estate of which he is not in possession, in consideration of advances to enable him to sue for its recovery, it is not open to the purchaser, after failing to complete his part of the contract, to claim specific performance and delivery of the recovered estate on tendering the balance of the purchase-money. 2. ——— Suit to compel transfer of property. When a bill of sale, though signed and registered, has not been delivered, and no part of the purchase-money has been paid, the vendor cannot be compelled to complete the transfer. LALLA INDURJEET LALL alias GUJADHUR PERSHAD v. JUMOONA . . 5 W. R. 248

3. ——— Incomplete contract. A bill of sale, though duly executed, was not delivered to the purchaser, but was deposited with a third party, to be held by him until the purchaser should perform certain acts, the performance of which was the consideration for the sale. The purchaser subsequently by a trick got possession of the bill of sale before he had performed all the acts in question. Held, that, under such circumstances, no effect could be given to the bill of sale as against the vendor, so that a suit for possession of the lands covered by it would not lie. 4. ——— Vendor under bill of sale remaining in possession—Allegation of fraud—Suit to set aside bill of sale. When a person grants a bill of sale to another person absolute in its terms, he cannot sue to have it set aside on the ground that he has all along remained in possession ; and if he alleges fraud in the contract, and adduces the fact of non-payment of the consideration-money as evidence of fraud, he will be bound to show proof of non-payment. 5. ——— Bill of sale as construed by intention of parties—Right of purchaser to sue. Cases will often arise in which, though a bill of sale may in terms purport to convey the property itself, yet it is clear upon the face of the instrument that the intention of the parties was to convey the right of entry or the equity of redemption, and nothing more. In such cases the Court should not lay stress on the mere terms of the instrument, but give effect to the intention of the parties, and recognize the purchaser's right of action to eject the trespasser or to redeem the mortgage. of parting with it, should restore it to the original owner or his heirs at a fixed price; and the purchaser, having been restrained by this agreement from selling off this property to a third person, had, on his retirement to England, given other persons a farming lease of it for fifteen years:—Held, that, as the object of the original stipulation was to secure the constant possession of the share to some one with whom the original owner or his heirs, who still retained the residue of the estate, could keep up friendly relations, the grant of the farmer's lease was a violation of the covenant; and that the heirs of the original owner were entitled to have the share in suit conveyed to them at the stipulated price. 2. ——— Covenant repugnant to interest created—Contemporaneous "ikrarnama"—Condition restraining alienation. M, a co-sharer in a village, transferred to A, another co-sharer, a 2 annas share by deed of sale. Upon the same date A executed an ikrarnamah, in which he agreed that he would not collect the rents of the 2 annas transferred to him, that he would not ever demand partition of that share, and that he would not alienate or mortgage it or otherwise exercise proprietary rights over it. It was further provided that in the event of A committing any breach of covenant the sale should be avoided, and the proprietary rights in the 2 annas share should re-vest in M. Held, that the deed of sale and the ikrarnamah must be regarded as recording one single transaction, i.e., they must be read together as stating the nature of the transaction entered into upon that date between the plaintiff and the defendant, which on the face of it professed to be a sale of a 9 annas share to the other by the former; and that, in this view, it was clear from the ikrarnamah that the proprietary title created by the sale-deed was cut down to nil, and limitations placed upon it which rendered it useless as a proprietary right. Situl Purshad v. Luchmi Purshad, *I. The plaintiff and the defendant sued to recover possession, but failed on the ground that the vendor had no title. 7. ——— Covenant for quiet enjoyment—Sale of property—No title in vendor to part of property sold—Suit by purchaser for damages—Failure of consideration—Cause of action—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), Sch. II, Arts. 83 and 97. On the 22nd November, 1880, the first and second defendants, for themselves and for the third defendant, sold a certain house to the plaintiff's father. The sale-deed, which was duly registered, contained the following clause: "We (vendors) are in enjoyment of the house as its owners, and, if any one were to obstruct you in the enjoyment of the house, we would remove the obstruction so as to put you to no trouble." In the year 1892 the plaintiff brought a suit to recover possession of the house. Both the lower Courts awarded the claim, but on the 26th August, 1896, the High Court, in second appeal, varied the decree, holding that the one-third share of the house which belonged to the third defendant did not pass by the sale; and the plaintiff was awarded only two-thirds of the house, of which he was put in possession. On the 24th August, 1899, the plaintiff brought the present suit, claiming inter alia from defendants 1 and 2 to recover R225 as damages sustained by him by reason of his being deprived of the one-third share of the house. Held, that the claim for damages was a claim to recover money upon an existing consideration that had failed, and that it fails under Art. 97, Sch. II, of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877), and not Art. 83, and was therefore time-barred, not having been brought within three years from the failure of consideration. The clause in the sale-deed was not a contract of indemnity. It was at most a covenant for title and quiet enjoyment. The failure of consideration took place when the

8. ——— Covenant to pay arrears of rent—Contract by vender to pay arrears of rent—Default—Sale of part of the property, effect of—Damages. Plaintiff purchased certain jotes from defendants Nos. 1 and 2, and there was a stipulation that the arrears which were due to the landlord up to the time of sale were to be paid by the vendors, failing which, if the vendee should have to make the payment, he would be entitled to recover the amount as a loss sustained by him. Subsequent to the plaintiff's purchase, the landlords brought suits for rent due for the period anterior to the date of plaintiff's purchase, and also for a period subsequent thereto. In execution of decrees obtained in these suits, property to the extent of 51 bighas, covered by the deed of sale was sold. Held, that the plaintiff was entitled, if not under the strict words, at all events under the spirit of the terms, of the kobala, to recover from the defendants the sum which was due as arrears from them, to pay off which property of the plaintiff had been sold, the sale having been due mainly, if not entirely, to the defendants' failure to comply with the stipulation in the kobala. KUTAB ALI SHAH FAKIR v. AZIBULLA MONDUL (1903).

3. BREACH OF WARRANTY.

1. ——— Suit on warranty—Knowledge by purchaser of title being doubtful. A purchaser, aware of the doubtful character of the title to the estate he is about to purchase, is justified in taking a guarantee from the seller, who cannot successfully plead to a suit on the guarantee that the purchaser was aware of the facts which induced him to stipulate therefor. 2. ——— Sale of whole title—Failure of title—Suit for money had and received. A vendor legally conveying all his title cannot be sued for money had and received, although the title prove defective. curred by him in defending such suit, basing his claim upon the condition set forth above. Held, that the suit was not maintainable, as such condition referred to flaws or defects in the vendor's title, and was not applicable to a loss accruing to the purchaser from his disqualification to buy. 7. ——— Condition that purchaser shall take such title as vendor can give where vendor has no title at all—Auction-sale by mortgagee of mortgaged property—Condition of sale—Implied possession of some title in vendor. R having stolen from N the title-deeds relating to a certain property in Bombay in which he had no interest, but which belonged to N, deposited them with the plaintiffs, to whom he also executed an indenture of mortgage of the property comprised in the deeds to secure the repayment of a loan advanced to him by the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs subsequently sold the property at an auction-sale under the power of sale contained in the mortgage. The property was put up to action under certain conditions of sale, of which the following was one: "The vendors shall not be bound to give any better title to the purchaser than they themselves possess; and the purchaser shall take the premises sold with such title only as the vendors can give him." Before the sale commenced, a notice on behalf of N was read out to the persons then present, which stated that she claimed the property as absolute owner, and that R (who had mortgaged it to the vendors) had no interest in it. The defendant was not present when the notice was read. He did not arrive at the auction until after the bidding had begun, but on his arrival he was told of N's claim. He was told nothing to make the above condition of sale misleading. He bid for the property and ultimately became the purchaser for R1,075. He immediately paid R275 by way of deposit, and signed an agreement to complete, which had the conditions of sale annexed to it. He subsequently ascertained that R had no interest in the property, and thereupon he called upon the plaintiffs (the mortgagees) to make out a good title, or to repay his deposit. The plaintiffs, however, relying on the above condition of sale, required him to complete his purchase; and he having failed to do so, they filed this suit against him, to recover the balance of the purchase-money. Held, that the defendant was not liable to pay to the plaintiffs the balance of the purchase-money. The suit, although in form a suit to recover the residue of the purchase-money, was virtually one to compel specific performance, and was governed by the principles applicable to such a suit. The purchaser was entitled to say that the above condition of sale implied that the vendors had some title, however defective it might be, and he had received at the auction no information which could be regarded as giving him notice to the contrary. 4. CAVEAT EMPTOR.

1. ——— Right of purchaser—Warranty of title—Hindu law—Contract—Sale of land in Bombay. In England the law gives to the purchaser of land a right to have a good title to it shown by the vendor. The purchaser is bound to look not only to his own title, but to see that he is properly indemnified by the covenants in his deed of purchase; and if he does not choose to protect himself in this manner, he has no remedy: for if a deed of purchase has been once executed, unless there is an eviction by the vendor or some person claiming under him, the purchaser has no right of action against the vendor. On appeal the District Judge reversed this decree, holding that, as the purchaser had not insisted on a covenant for title, he must be held to have accepted all risks. Held, that, if there had been fradulent concealment as alleged, the purchaser was entitled to damages. In 1886 the plaintiff purchased the same share from the same vendor under a registered deed of sale. It was found on the facts that the plaintiff purchased with notice of the defendants' previous purchase, and that the defendants had possession of the purchased share from the date of their purchase. Held (on appeal under the Letters Patent of the High Court) by TREVAELYAN, J., upholding the decision of BEVERLEY, J. (HILL, J., dissenting), that the possession obtained by the defendants was a sufficient "delivery of the property" within the meaning of s. 54 of the Transfer of Property Act. Makhan Lall Pal v. *Bunku Behari Ghose, I. On the 18th of May 1888 B brought a suit for pre-emption of that share. Pending the suit, on the 6th of July 1888 the vendor, the vendee, and the pre-emptor entered into an agreement, by which the vendee, recognizing the pre-emptive right of the plaintiff, agreed to re-transfer the property to the vendor or the pre-emptor on payment by either of them on the full moon of Jeth in any year of the price paid by him. On the 20th of June 1891, the vendor, affecting to treat the transaction of the 6th of June 1887 as a mortgage, made an application purporting to be under s. 83 of the Transfer of Property Act, accompanied by payment of the price of the property into Court and prayed for redemption. The vendee refused to take out the money deposited by the vendor, and subsequently on the 13th of November 1891 R K applied for repayment to him of the said money, stating that he wished the vendee to remain in possession, and asking that the agreement of the 6th of July 1888 might be considered null and void. On the 1st of September 1892 one R S filed a suit for pre-emption of the said property. Held, that the original transaction of the 6th of June 1887 was an out-and-out sale, and was not, and could not be, by the subsequent agreement between the parties, turned into a mortgage by conditional sale ; and in consequence that the suit brought by R S was barred by limitation. receipt of consideration. The deed was dated in January 1876, and the suit was instituted in 1884. It was found that the vendor had been in possession during the whole of that period. The plaintiff produced no evidence in proof of the payment of consideration. Held, that although, under ordinary circumstances, the party to a deed duly executed and registered who alleges non-payment of consideration is bound to prove his allegation, the fact that the plaintiff and his predecessor had silently submitted to the withholding of possession for upwards of eight years, combined with the continuous possession of the vendor, favoured the allegation of the latter that possession had been withheld because of the non-payment of consideration, and raised such a counter-presumption as to make it incumbent on the plaintiff to give evidence that consideration had in fact passed. Held, therefore, that in the absence of such evidence, and of evidence to explain the fact of the plaintiff being out of possession, the suit failed. Under the ordinary rule of law, a purchaser has a right to sue for possession when a portion of the consideration-money has been paid, unless the contrary be shown to be the intention of the parties, and the seller has a right to sue for the balance of price. The defendants were unable to get a properly registered bill of sale of the ship made out owing to infirmity of their own title, but were willing, so far as they could, to convey. The plaintiff had made part payment in respect of the price of the ship. Held, that the consideration had failed, and that the plaintiff was entitled to a refund of the money paid by him in part payment, and of sums disbursed by him under the agreement on account of the expenses of the ship. liquidation were sold by a Director to the plaintiff, a shareholder. The latter now sued the vendor, alleging inducement to buy the shares by the vendor's false representations as to the state of the Bank's affairs. Both the Courts below concurred in finding that oral representations as to the latter alleged to have been made by the defendant to the plaintiff were not proved. Those Courts, however, had concurred in finding that the defendant, though he was not responsible for false balance-sheets issued before 1890, was well aware of the falseness of the one issued for the half-year ending on the 30th June 1890. The Judicial Committee saw no reason for interfering with these concurrent findings. The plaintiff, in this appeal, relied on the issue of the false balance-sheet of 1890, the issue of a false report by the Directors, and a wrongful payment of dividend for the period above-mentioned, acts in which the defendant had taken part; these acts, as a series, constituting false representations, the bank having in fact been insolvent at the time. But it was not shown by the evidence that the plaintiff had been induced to buy the shares, which he had contracted to buy in two sets, one in September, the other later on in 1890, by any of the representations so made; regard being had to the dates respectively and to his own knowledge. The dismissal of the suit was therefore maintained. MACAULIFFE v. WILSON.

If the purchase be made by a stranger, such a purchaser need not show that the consideration paid by him is a consideration equal to the value of the property; it will be sufficient for the purchaser to show that the sale was made by a person who had authority from the owner to sell; and, unless the seller can establish a fraudulent connivance between the agent employed to sell and the purchaser, the sale will be binding on the seller on proof of authority of the agent to sell. 8. ——— Sale by old and illiterate woman without professional advice—Fraud—Undue influence—Inadequate consideration—Terms on which deed will be set aside—Purchase-money declared a charge—Funeral expenses of Hindu widow declared a charge—No allowance for repairs and improvements. C was the widow of one R, deceased, and from the death of R until her own death remained in occupation of a house and chawl which had belonged to him. D was a sister of C's, and, shortly after R's death, D and her son B, the first and second defendants, went to live with C on the said property, and lived with C and were her only companions until C's death. While so living with C, D and B advanced to C at various times, on joint account, various sums of money, amounting to R3,500, for purposes such as would have justified C in pledging the property of her late husband to secure the repayment of the same. C became very ill, and D and B, fearing she might be going to die, requested her to take some steps to secure to them the repayment of the sums they had advanced to her. C thereupon offered to give D and B an absolute deed of sale of the said house and chawl in consideration of the said sum of R3,500 already advanced to her and of an additional sum of R500 then to be paid to her to defray her funeral expenses and the costs of the said conveyance. D and B consented, and called in their solicitor to take C's instructions and draw up the deed in question, which he accordingly did; and within three days of the said agreement the deed was executed. At that time C was very ill, and twelve days after the execution of the deed C died. C was an illiterate woman over sixty years of age, and had in this matter no independent professional or other advice. The additional sum of R500 agreed to be paid to see C was never so paid to her, but after her death D and her son expended moneys in and about her funeral ceremonies amounting, as they alleged, to upwards of R400. The property in question so pledged to them for R4,000 was worth at least R5,200. The plaintiff, one of the heirs of R, sued to set the deed aside and for possession of the said property. Held, that the deed of sale must be set aside as obtained under circumstances which amounted to fraud. Held, also, that the advances, amounting to R3,500, made to C by D and her son B, being made for purposes for which C would have been justified in pledging the said property, the deed of sale should be set aside only on the terms that the property in question should stand charged with the repayment of the sums so advanced. Held, also, that the property must stand charged with the repayment to D and B of such a sum as, having regard to her position and station in life, should be found to be a reasonable sum for the funeral expenses of C. After C's death, D and B remained in possession of the said property under the deed of sale, and expended considerable sums of money in and about repairs and improvements to the same; and they now claimed that, if the sale was to be set aside, the sums so expended should be repaid to them. Held, that no allowance could be made to D and B for sums so expended by them such sums having been expended at a time when D and B must be taken to have known that they were fraudulently in possession of the property in question. 9. ——— Inadequacy of consideration—Actual or constructive fraud—Cancelment of sale—Sales by expectant heirs of reversionary interests. In the case of a sale by a person, young indeed and in distressed circumstances, but not without advice or means of information, of an estate actually vested in him, but not to be obtained without litigation, the party seeking to set aside the sale must establish the fraud, actual or constructive, which entitles him to relief. It is not sufficient for him to show that he did not receive the full value of the estate to which the result of the litigation might ultimately show him to be entitled. The difference between that value and the purchase-money, if not too disproportionate, may be legitimately taken to represent the difference between certainty and immediate enjoyment on the one hand, and risk, worry, expense, and delay on the other. The exceptional equitable principles which, in a sale by an expectant heir of a reversionary interest, throw upon the purchaser the onus of showing that he gave a fair price, and which, on failure of such proof, entitles the expectant heir to have the sale set aside, have no application in the above case, or in that of every ignorant and improvident person. 11. ——— Alienation to defeat execution of decree—Rights of creditor without specific lien against purchaser—Fraud. On the 3rd October 1865 the plaintiff filed a suit against D to recover certain lands and money. While the suit was pending—viz., on the 13th October 1866, —D mortgaged part of his immoveable property to defendant R, and on 21st August 1871 executed a deed of sale to defendant R of all the immoveable property of which he (D) was then possessed, for the price of R4,000. On 30th April 1872 the plaintiff obtained a decree against D, and in execution thereof attached certain immoveable property other than the land mentioned in the decree. The defendant R applied under s. 246 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act VIII of 1859), and on the 21st August 1873 procured the removal of the attachment, whereupon the plaintiff brought the present suit to set aside the order of 21st August 1873 and to obtain a declaration that the attached property belonged to D and was liable in execution. Held, that, inasmuch as neither the decree of the 30th April 1872, nor the plaint on which it was founded, established or sought to establish any claim against a specific lien upon the immoveable property, the subject of the present suit, it was perfectly competent for D, at any time previously to an attachment of the property to alienate it, and the question for decision as to that property was whether D had alienated it or not. If the deed of sale by which D conveyed the property on the 21st August 1871 were merely colourable, and the change of ownership ostensible only and not real,—i.e., if it was the intention of the parties that the alienee should be merely a trustee for D to shield the property from execution, and that D should continue to be the beneficial owner of it,—there would not be any alienation, and the deed of sale would be void as against an attaching creditor of

In the interval between the two transactions above referred to, the plaintiff had purchased the land from B, and he now alleged that the persons in possession had executed a rent agreement, in fact found to be a forgery, under the terms of which he claimed to eject them. Held, that the plaintiff's claim, founded on the transaction of 1887, did not prevail against C and D. He thereupon filed this suit. It was found that the second defendant bought in December, 1895, with notice of the earlier agreement with the plaintiff of June, 1895. Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to possession. The second defendant having bought with notice of the plaintiff's contract, he held the property for the benefit of the plaintiff, to the extent necessary to give effect to that contract. Held, also, that the form of the decree should be as follows :—There should be a declaration that the second defendant holds the property for the benefit of the plaintiff to the extent necessary to give effect to the contract of the 25th June, 1895 ; there should be a decree that the second defendant do execute to the plaintiff a proper conveyance of the thikam ; and a decree for possession. In 1890 the plaintiff purchased a part of this land from the defendant by a registered sale-deed, and took possession. In the following year, in a partition suit brought by the defendant against his co-sharers (of whom the plaintiff was one), a part of the land bought by the plaintiff was allotted to a third co-sharer, and another part was allotted to the plaintiff himself, and in March, 1896, in execution of the partition decree, the plaintiff was deprived of the part allotted to the third co-sharer. In 1899 the plaintiff filed this suit, praying that the defendant might be ordered to make over to him other land in place of that of which he (the plaintiff) had been deprived, and also claiming damages. The first Court dismissed the suit. On appeal, the District Judge reversed that decree and awarded the plaintiff the defendant's share of the land, together with R62 as damages. Held, that the plaintiff was not entitled to damages. There was no title, express or implied, given by the defendant. The interest of the defendant in the land was well known to the plaintiff when he bought. The liability to partition as regards the land could not be removed by the seller (defendant), as was well known to the buyer (plaintiff). SHIVRAM GOVIND DESAI v. BAL DAJI DESAI (1902).

mortgagees at 'sale inducing bidders to leave—Knowledge of purchaser of such circumstances—Notice—Proviso in mortgage to protect purchaser—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 69. At an auction sale under a power of sale in a mortgage on conditions one of which both the lower Courts found to be a depreciatory condition wholly unwarranted by the state of the mortgagor's title, the mortgaged property was knocked down to the appellant who the same day signed a written contract to purchase. In a suit by the purchaser against the mortgagor for possession of the property to which suit the mortgagees were made parties : Held, that the purchaser was not affected with constructive notice of the true state of the title by reason of the fact that some days after the contract of sale was completed, he instructed the mortgagees' solicitor to act for him in the preparation of the deed of conveyance, and that the solicitor knew that the condition of sale was unjustifiable. The knowledge of the solicitor as to the title was not acquired in the matter for which he was the purchaser's agent and could not be used to upset a transaction of a date before that agency commenced. The sale was therefore not invalid on that ground. The mortgage which was in the English form contained a proviso that upon the exercise of the power of sale "the purchaser, shall not be bound to see or inquire whether any default has been made, or otherwise as to the necessity or expediency of such sale, or that the sale is otherwise improper or irregular, and notwithstanding any such irregularity, such sale shall, as far as regards the safety and protection of the purchaser, be deemed to be within the aforesaid power, and be valid and effectual accordingly, and the remedy of the mortgagor shall be in damages only." It was found by the first Court on the facts that at the sale the mortgagee defendants by themselves or their agents so conducted themselves with reference to the sale that bidders were induced to leave, and that the purchaser was present and had notice of those circumstances. Held, that the purchaser was affected with notice of the impropriety of the sale, and bought at his own risk, notwithstanding the proviso in the mortgage and the provisions of s. 69 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), and that these circumstances invalidated the sale. the parties to it, and that A had no right of suit against C, to whom the land had been transferred: —Held, by the Privy Council, reversing that decision, that the agreement created a lien on the land and that no positive law was shown to forbid the giving effect to such agreement. The owner of property subject to a lien or charge can in general convey to another no title higher or more free than his own; it lies always on a succeeding owner to make out a case to defend such prior charge. The law in India does not enable a purchaser of land to look only to the apparent title in the Collector's books, or the presumed title of the owner in possession; and it is beyond the province of a Court of justice to give effect to the title of such a purchaser to the extent of defeating a prior lien or charge. Conceding that a purchaser for value bonâ fide, and without notice of the charge, would have an equity superior to A's right:—Held, that a purchase in good faith by C had not been proved. 11. ——— Incumbrance—Fraud—Equitable mortgage—Purchaser for valuable consideration without notice. The reason for the rule of equity that a purchaser of property, though for valuable consideration, yet with notice of a prior incumbrancer, purchases subject to such incumbrance, is that such purchaser is acting malâ fide in taking away the right of the prior incumbrancer by getting the legal estate, while knowing that a prior purchaser has the right to it. But a purchaser for valuable consideration without notice of the prior right of a third person, is not guilty of or party to a fraud upon the rights of a prior purchaser. The Courts of equity therefore will not interfere with his right to the possession, enjoyment, and disposal of the property ; and though subsequently to his purchase he may become aware of the prior incumbrance, yet he has the right to convey to a subsequent purchaser, who, at the time of such subsequent conveyance, has notice of the prior right of the third person ; and such subsequent purchaser will take the property free from the incumbrance, for neither is he guilty of any fraud in accepting what his vendor had a right to convey, nor would the bonâ fide purchaser without notice be able otherwise freely and completely to dispose of the property which he innocently acquired. On the same principles, any subsequent purchaser, however remote, though having notice must be protected. Where, therefore, the second defendant, having notice of the plaintiff's equitable mortgage, purchased from one who, also with such notice, had purchased from a bonâ fide purchaser for value without notice :—Held, that the second defendant held the property free from the equitable mortgage. Carter v. Carter, 3 K. & J. 617, distinguished. On the attachment of the immoveable property in execution of that decree, the defendant objected under s. 246 of the Civil Procedure Code, and alleged that he had purchased the property in 1865. The attachment having accordingly been raised, the plaintiff sued for a declaration of his right to sell the mortgaged property. Both the lower Courts threw out the plaintiff's claim. On special appeal the decrees of the lower Courts were reversed, and the case remanded for the trial of the issue whether the defendant was a bonâ fide purchaser for valuable consideration, without notice of the plaintiff's sankhat or lien on the property in dispute at or before the time of his purchase. The conveyance to the plaintiff was duly registered. The third defendant claimed part of the land under a previous sale to him in 1885 by the first defendant. The conveyance to him being also duly registered. The fourth defendant claimed the rest of the land under a sale to him by the first defendant subsequent to the sale to the plaintiff, of which he had no notice. He relied upon the fact of his having got possession, and he alleged that the purchase-money which he had paid for the land had been applied by the first defendant in paying off a mortgagee who at the date of his purchase was in possession. He claimed, at all events, the repayment of this sum. Held, (i) that the plaintiff was not entitled to the lands in the hand of the third defendant, the latter being a prior purchaser with a deed of conveyance duly registered. (ii) That the plaintiff was entitled to the land in the possession of the fourth defendant, who must be taken to have purchased with notice of the plaintiff's prior purchase, inasmuch as the deed of conveyance to the latter was registered. (iii) That, if the fourth defendant's purchase-money was applied to pay off a mortgage which plaintiff would otherwise have had to pay, the plaintiff could not equitably recover the land without paying the fourth defendant so much of the purchase-money as was so applied. This deed made no reference to the rights and privileges of the raiyats. In 1868 the defendant purchased the village from its legal owners. In 1889 plaintiffs sued defendant for themselves and on behalf of the other raiyats of the village to enforce their rights. The defendant pleaded that, as the deed of conveyance of 1819 made no mention of these rights, he was not bound by them. Held, that, as at the time of the conveyance of the village to the defendant the lands were in the occupation of the raiyats, the defendants ought to have made inquiry as to their rights. 22. ——— Liability of land purchased from Hindu devisee for debts of his testator—Onus probandi. Per PONTIFEX, J. The question how far lands purchased from a Hindu devisee are liable in the hands of the purchaser for the testator's debts stands on the same footing as a similar question would under the present English law. The creditors of the ancestor or testator may follow his lands into the possession of a purchaser from the heir or devisee, if it can be proved that such purchaser knew (i) that there were debts of the ancestor or testator left unsatisfied, and (ii) also that the heir or devisee to whom he paid his purchase-money intended to apply it otherwise than in the payment of such debts. But a purchaser ignorant on either of these points has a safe title, for no duty is cast upon the purchaser from the heir or devisee to inquire whether there are any debts of the ancestor or testator, or to see to the application of his purchase-money, even when there is an express charge of debts by the testator on the devised estate—at least when the devisee in also executor; and in such a case the burden of proof is entirely on the creditor to show that the purchaser from the devisee had notice that the latter intended to misapply the purchase-money. For a purchaser to be affected with constructive notice through his solicitor, the latter himself must have actual notice. GREENDER CHUNDER GHOSE v. MACKINTOSH.

But if there is not actual notice, and no wilful or fraudulent turning away from an inquiry into, and consequent knowledge of, facts which the circumstances would suggest to a prudent mind, then the doctrine of constructive notice ought not to be applied. 26. ——— Registration—Possession—Registration Acts, effect of—English Registry Acts, Stat. 7 Anne, c. 20, s. 1; 2 & 3 Anne, c. 4, s. 1; 6 Anne, c. 35, s. 1; 8 Geo. 2, c. 6, s. 1—Irish Registry Act, 6 Anne, c. 2, s. 4 (Ireland). Neither in England nor in Ireland has mere registration been held to amount to notice to subsequent mortgagees or purchasers. In Bombay the Courts have adopted the rule which prevails in America, and have held that registration does amount to notice to all subsequent purchasers of the same property. Possession has been deemed by Hindu and Mahomedan law, as interpreted in the Presidency of Bombay, to amount to notice of such title as the person in possession may have; and any other person who takes a mortgage or other charge upon immoveable property without ascertaining the nature of the claim of him who is in possession does so at his own risk. This is the rule in England also. The Indian Registration Acts prior to the year 1864, like the Middlesex Registry Act (Stat. 7 Anne, c. 20, s. 1); the Yorkshire Registry Acts (Stat. 2 & 3 Anne, c. 4, s. 1; 6 Anne, c. 35, s. 1; 8 Geo. II, c. 6, s. 1), and the Irish Registry Act (Stat. 6 Anne, c. 2, s. 4, Ir.) gave priority of rank to priority of registration. The later Indian Registration Acts—viz., Acts XVI of 1864, XX of 1866, VIII of 1871, and III of 1877—proceed upon a different principle. Under them a registered instrument operates from the time at which it would have commenced to operate if no registration had been required or made, and not from the time of its registration, which rule applies both to compulsory and optional registrable instruments. The earlier decisions, by which registration has in India been permitted to supply the want of possession, may be attributed to this absolute preference so accorded by the earlier Registration Acts to priority of registration. In the reported case under the

Indian Registration Acts passed in, and subsequently to, 1864, which have not (like the previous enactments) given priority of rank to priority of registration, the Courts have also regarded registration as an equivalent for possession where the instrument earlier in date has been registered, but unaccompanied by possession. The Courts have gone a step further, and have held registration under Act XVI of 1864 and the subsequent Acts to amount to notice, and therefore to atone for the absence of, and to be a sufficient substitute for, possession in the validation of title. The rule, however, that registration is equivalent to possession, cannot be applied to cases where the registration of the instrument earlier in date has been effected subsequently to the execution of the instrument set up against it. The defendant purchased the same property on the 1st April 1878, and on the following day lodged his deed of purchase with the Registrar together with the registration fee. It was registered on the 26th May 1878. His purchase was accompanied with possession. In a suit brought by the plaintiff against the vendor and the subsequent purchaser for possession of the property:—Held, that the registration of the plaintiff's deed of purchase, not having been effected until after the execution of the defendant's deed, could not have operated as notice of the plaintiff's deed to the defendant, and therefore could not be equivalent to possession. Held, also, that, as the defendant was a purchaser without notice, either actual or constructive, of the plaintiff's prior purchase, and had taken the precaution of obtaining possession, both parties being Hindus and innocent purchasers, the defendant could not be deprived of the benefit of his possession. 29. ——— San-mortgage in Gujarat—Priority—Priority as between a purchaser at execution-sale and prior mortgagee by unregistered san-mortgage—Plea of purchase without notice. The general rule in the Presidency of Bombay is that amongst Hindus possession is necessary in order to perfect a transfer of immoveable property by mortgage or deed of sale as against subsequent incumbrancers or purchases. The main ground of this rule is that possession is notice to all subsequent intending mortgagees or purchasers of the title of the party in possession. It is, however, the established and judicially recognised custom of Gujarat that possession is not necessary in the case of a san-mortgage to validate it as against subsequent mortgagees or purchasers. The necessity of possession being thus dispensed with, it seems to follow that a san-mortgage, in other respects good, is valid as against a subsequent mortgagee or purchaser, whether or not such mortgagee or purchaser has notice of the san-mortgage. To hold that a subsequent mortgagee or purchaser for valuable consideration and without notice of a san-mortgage is entitled to priority over it would be tantamount to depriving the san-mortgagee of the benefit of the custom that possession is unnecessary. Per MELVILL, J.—Such perfect security is now afforded by registration that there appears to be hardly room for the plea of purchase without notice. Seeing that a purchaser may secure himself against all unregistered mortgages without possession by simply taking possession or registering his conveyance, he is, if he omit to do so, in pari delicto with the prior mortgagee, and it is difficult to see how he is entitled to any relief. 5. ———— Purchase by mortgagee—Possession—Priority—Registration. A registered mortgage without possession has priority over a subsequent registered sale and conveyance with possession. By a duly registered deed, D mortgaged land to the plaintiff with power of sale. On default made by D, the plaintiff brought a suit for a sale of the mortgaged land ; but pending the suit, D sold the land to the defendant, who registered his conveyance and entered into possession. The plaintiff subsequently obtained a decree, and at the execution-sale became himself the purchaser. In the present suit he sought to recover possession from the defendant. Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to recover. His rights as mortgagee included the right of bringing to sale the property as it subsisted at the date of the mortgage. The property having been so brought to sale, the purchaser acquired a right free from any created subsequently to the mortgage and subject to it. SHRINGARPURE v. PETHE. I. L. R. 2 Bom. 662

6. ———— Rights of mortgagee—Mortgage sale without disclosing—Estoppel. The three senior members of an undivided Hindu family—the remaining members of which had disappeared—setting forth a ground of necessity, executed to the plaintiff, in November 1870, a mortgage, duly registered, of a piece of land which formed part of the family estate. Certain judgment-creditors of the absent member subsequently attached and sold his share in the said land under their decree. The plaintiff's undivided son purchased it, and in 1872 re-sold his right, title, and interest in it to defendant's father, without disclosing the fact of his father's mortgage, but without any active fraud on the part of himself or his father to suppress the fact from the knowledge of his purchaser. In 1874 the plaintiff obtained a decree upon his mortgage, and attached the land. In a suit by the plaintiff to establish his right as against all the land included in his mortgage :—Held, that the mortgage being, under the circumstances, a valid one, the sale of the absent son's share was subject to the lien created thereby, which lien was not disturbed by the purchase and subsequent sale of the share by the son of the mortgagee. The origin of the son's title was stated in the deed of sale to the new purchaser, who, by the facts of its being a sale of a share, was put upon inquiry. The mere want of disclosure by the plaintiff's undivided son of his father's mortgage was not enough to create an estoppel against his father seeking to establish his claim under the mortgage. 7. ———— Sale of equity of redemption—right of purchaser—Parties. By two deeds dated respectively the 22nd February 1868 and 7th September 1872, and duly registered, A mortgaged the lands in dispute to B for a term of years which expired in 1880. On 10th October 1873, A executed a razinama in favour of B relinquishing all his right in the said lands, and B next day executed a kabuliat to Government for the lands, which thenceforward were entered in B's name. Previously to the second mortgage and razinama to B,—viz., on 21st March 1870—A had, by a duly registered deed, mortgaged the same lands to the plaintiff, who in 1874 brought a suit against A upon his mortgage and obtained a decree under which he sold the mortgaged property, and became himself the purchaser thereof. Before and at the time of the institution of this suit, B was in possession of the mortgaged land, but was not made a party to the suit. In 1877 B sold the land to C by a duly registered deed. In a suit brought by the plaintiff against B and C to recover possession of the land so purchased by him as abovementioned, at the sale in execution of his own decree :—Held, that B's possession at the date of the plaintiff's suit upon his mortgage was sufficient to put the plaintiff on inquiry, and to constitute legal notice to him that the equity of redemption was at that time vested in B, and it was therefore the plaintiff's duty to have made B a party to the suit brought by him against A, who had then alienated the equity of redemption to B ; and not having done so, the plaintiff could not rely, in support of his own title, upon a purchase under his own irregularly-obtained decree, and could not therefore stand in a better position as against B than if his original suit had been properly constituted,—i.e., he was bound to give B an opportunity of redeeming his mortgage. against the son and heirs of the mortgagor. In execution of that decree, the property was sold subject to the mortgage, and purchased by B on the 12th August 1864. Before confirmation of the sale, B, on the 1st September 1864, sold it to C, who, on the 30th March 1877, conveyed it by deed to the plaintiff. On the 27th September 1877 the plaintiff brought a suit for redeeming the property, and at the hearing produced a certificate of sale, dated the 27th October 1877. The certificate was applied for in May 1877, and issued to C, reciting the sale to B, and the sale by B to C. The Court of first instance allowed the plaintiff to redeem on payment of a certain sum of money to the defendant. The Assistant Judge, on appeal, reversed the decree of the first Court on the ground that the certificate of sale was not in existence at the date of institution of the suit, and that therefore the plaintiff had then no complete title. On appeal to the High Court :—Held, that the plaintiff, having purchased and paid for the equity of redemption, was entitled to redeem, although the certificate of sale was not issued until after the suit had commenced. If a party, whose title is to some extent imperfect, seeks to redeem, and is able to prove a perfect title at the hearing of his cause, he should have a decree for redemption. *Harkisandas Narandas v. 9. ——— Purchaser of mortgagor's interest—Priority—Purchaser of value without notice of a prior san-mortgage—Suit by mortgagee against purchaser to establish right to attach property—Right to purchaser to redeem—Parties—Form of decree. On the 23rd March 1869 a house was mortgaged by its owner, P, to J, by a san-mortgage. After the death of P, his heirs, D and T, on the 9th July 1869 executed to the plaintiff a san-mortgage of the same house for R62. That mortgage was neither registered nor accompanied with possession. On the 27th July 1869 D and T sold the house to the defendant. The deed of sale was not registered. A part of the purchase-money was applied to the payment of the first san-mortgage, which was then delivered up to the defendant, with a receipt on it by J, who acknowledged to have received from the defendant the amount due on his mortgage. The defendant, however, omitted to take an assignment of that mortgage to himself. The plaintiff sued D and T on his san-mortgage of the 9th July 1869, and in 1872 obtained a decree for the recovery of the mortgage-debt out of the mortgaged property. The defendant was not made a party to that suit. The plaintiff attached the house in execution of his decree, but the attachment was raised on the application of the defendant under s. 246 of the Civil Procedure Code, Act VIII of 1859. The plaintiff then sued the defendant to establish his (plaintiff's) right to attach and sell the house under his san-mortgage. The defendant answered that he was a purchaser for value, within notice of the plaintiff's mortgage. The plaintiff's claim was dismissed by the first Court, but allowed by the Appellate Court. On special appeal :—Held, that the defendant's plea that he was a purchaser for valuable consideration, and without notice of the plaintiff's san-mortgage, would not avail to defeat that mortgage under the established usage of Gujarat in favour of san-mortgages. Held, further, that the defendant, having become entitled by his purchase at least to the equity of redemption in the house, ought to have been made a party to the plaintiff's original suit on his mortgage, and was not bound by the decree in that suit, and was entitled to a reasonable time to redeem the house from the plaintiff's mortgage. Sobhagchand Gulabchand v. *Bhaichand, I. 10. ——— Assignment of the equity of redemption by the mortgagor—No notice to mortgagees of such assignment—No change of name in Collector's books—Further advances by mortgagees to original mortgagor on same security—Suit by assignee of equity of redemption to redeem—Liability of assignee to pay off the further advances to mortgagor—Standing by—Allowing original mortgagor's name to remain in Collector's books. In order to complete an assignment of an equitable estate in immoveable property, it is not necessary by English law that notice of the assignment should be given to the owner of the legal estate. Nor is there any rule of Hindu law which requires notice to be given to the person in possession whose position may be considered analogous to the holder of the legal estate in English law. By a registered mortgage-deed P in 1869 mortgaged certain property with possession to the defendants. In 1871 P sold his equity of redemption to the plaintiffs, who allowed it to remain in P's name on the Collector's register. Subsequently in 1873 the defendants made further advances to P on the securtiy of the same mortgaged property. The plaintiffs sued to redeem. The Court of first instance rejected the plaintiffs' claim, being of opinion that their purchase was not proved. On appeal, the District Judge reversed the decree, holding that the sale to the plaintiffs was proved. He held further that the plaintiffs could not redeem without paying off the further advance made by the defendants in 1873, on the ground that the plaintiffs had given no notice of their purchase to the defendants, and had allowed P's name to remain on the Collector's register as the ostensible owner. The plaintiffs appealed to the High Court. Held, that the plaintiffs' title as assignee of the equity of redemption was complete, although no notice of the assignment had been given to the defendants. But although such notice was not necessary to complete, the plaintiffs' title, it was plain, upon general principles of equity, that if the plaintiffs' conduct was such as to amount to a standing by and allowing the defendants to make further advances to P under the supposition that he was still the owner of the equity of redemption, such conduct would give the defendants a better equity. If the property was standing in P's name in the Collector's books, the allowing it so to remain after the assignment would be sufficient for the purpose. GOVINDRAV v. RAVJI I. L. 11. ——— Unregistered agreement by mortgagor to sell to mortgagee—Subsequent assignment of equity of redemption to third person for value, but with notice of agreement. In a suit for redemption filed by an assignee for value of the equity of redemption against a mortgagee in possession, it was found that the mortgagor had agreed with the defendant to sell the mortgaged premises to him, that part of the purchase-money had been acknowledged as paid, and that the balance had been tendered in pursuance of the agreement. It was further found that the plaintiff had taken his assignment with notice of the above agreement and tender. The agreement was in writing, but not registered. Held, that, though the agreement was not admissible in evidence as creating an interest in land, still it might be used for the purpose of obtaining specific performance, and the plaintiff having purchased the equity of redemption with notice as above was not entitled to redeem. Per Curiam: The plaintiff having knowledge of the agreement was put upon enquiry to ascertain whether the tender had been made, and whether there was any objection to his purchase on that ground. The present suit was to compel the completion of the contract and delivery of the property. Held, that the Court was bound to see whether it was or was not the intention that a complete and binding sale should take place, although the purchase-money was not paid. Held, also, that in bringing such a suit the plaintiff was bound, if he had not previously tendered the money to the defendant, to pay it into Court. 15. ——— Contract to purchase property in cantonment—Rights of Government in such property—Contract making no mention of Government rights—Knowledge of purchaser—Suit by purchaser for specific performance or return of earnest-money—Earnest-money when repayable—Amendment of plaint so as to claim refund of earnest-money. On October 12th, 1887, the first defendant executed the following agreement in favour of plaintiff with respect to certain property situated in the Poona Cantonment: "I have agreed to sell to you . . . both my bangalows described above, including the sites and buildings together with the compounds, rooms for servants, stables, outhouses . . . . . and I have this day received from you ₹5,000 as earnest-money. After the sale-deed in regard to the said bungalows is executed, I will get them transferred to your name in the Brigade-Major's office." On the same day the first defendant received from the plaintiff ₹5,000 as earnest-money. A notice of the proposed sale was published in the newspapers, upon which the Poona Cantonment wrote to the plaintiff stating that Government possessed certain rights over the property. Plaintiff then demanded that the first defendant should obtain from Government and transfer to him a full and complete title in the property. The defendant refused, and prepared a draft deed transferring the ordinary cantonment tenure, which was a mere occupancy, and sent it to plaintiff. Plaintiff declined to accept it, and brought this suit to compel the first defendant to execute a deed transferring to him a full and complete title for possession of the property, and for rent and damages. Although apparently not arising upon the pleadings, an issue was raised by the parties as to whether by his conduct the plaintiff had forfeited his right to have the earnest-money returned to him. This issue was, however, struck out at the trial by the Subordinate Judge, who also refused to allow the plaint to be amended by inserting a claim for the payment of the earnest-money, on the ground that it would change the character of the suit from being one based on the contract of the 12th October 1887 into a suit based on the fact that there had never been a contract at all between the parties. He dismissed the suit. The plaintiff appealed, and contended that the contract was that the defendant should give an absolute title to the property, and that, as he was unable to carry out this contract, he should return the earnest-money to the plaintiff. Held (i) upon the evidence, per FARRAN, C.J., and FULTON, JARDINE and RANADE, JJ. (CANDY, J., dissentiente), that the knowledge that the property in question was held upon cantonment tenure was not brought home to the plaintiff, and that the Courrt could not impute such knowledge to him; that the terms of the contract itself were calculated to induce the plaintiff to believe that the defendant was selling not a mere revocable license to occupy the land, but the land itself. The defendant agreed to sell the land, and, having done so, the onus lay upon him to show not only that he intended to sell only cantonment occupancy rights, but also that the plaintiff understood that he was purchasing the same. (ii) That the defendant, being in default and being unable to give the title contracted for, should return the earnest-money to the plaintiff. Held, by the Full Bench, that the amendment of the plaint so as to make it include a claim for the refund of the earnest-money ought to have been allowed, although not asked for until a late stage of the case. The right to specific performance of a contract, or, in the alternative, to a return of the earnest-money should be determined in one and the same suit, and the plaintiff failing to obtain a decree for specific performance should not be driven to a separate suit to recover back his deposit if he is entitled to relief in that form. The circumstance that a purchaser is not entitled to specific performance is by no means conclusive against his right to a return of the deposit. If, having regard to the terms of the contract, he is justified in refusing to accept the title, which the vendor is able to give, he is entitled to a refund of the deposit. 1. ——— Implied contract for good title—Suit by vendor for specific performance—Specific Relief Act (1 of 1877), s. 25—Title derived through will of former owner—Necessity for probate—Succession Act (X of 1865), s. 187—Notice to complete contract—Rescission of contract—Clause in contract requiring vendor to hand over deeds relating to property, construction of. By an agreement in writing, dated the 20th June 1888, the defendant purchased a certain house in Bombay from the plaintiff for R6,000. By this agreement the plaintiff agreed that at the time of the execution of the deed of sale he would hand over to the defendant "the title-deeds, vouchers and bills, whatever there may be relating to the said property." The agreement further provided: "The time in respect of this bargain is fixed at two months; within this time we are duly to have everything cleared." In September 1890 the plaintiff filed this suit for specific performance of the agreement. The defendant pleaded: 1st, that the plaintiff had failed to show a good title to the property; 2nd, that the plaintiff had not handed over to him all the deeds and documents relating to the property; 3rd, that he (the defendant) had lawfully rescinded the contract on the 30th August 1890. It appeared that in 1880 the then owner of the property, one N, had mortgaged it to one V, and that on the 26th October 1882 both mortgagor and mortgagee had joined in conveying it to one C. This deed, however, had not been registered and was consequently inadmissible in evidence, and was rejected at the hearing. C had, however, after his purchase taken possession of the property and had held it until 1885. On the 6th May 1885 he sold it to H. Prior to his sale, viz., in 1883, N had died, and left a will appointing V his executor, but no probate of this will had ever been obtained. In the sale-deed, however, to H of the 6th May 1885 V had joined as a conveying party both in his own right and as executor of N. On the 29th September 1887 H sold the property to the plaintiff, who, as already mentioned, sold it to the defendant on the 20th June 1888. Held, that the plaintiff was bound to give the defendant a good title, or, in other words, a title free from reasonable doubt (s. 25 of the Specific Relief Act I of 1877). In the absence of a contract providing that the plaintiff should show only such title as he could give, or of some other special contract as to title, the general law laid down in s. 25 of the Specific Relief Act I of 1877 must prevail. Held, further, dismissing the suit, that the title shown by the plaintiff was not a good title. The conveyance of the 26th October 1882 by the mortgagor and mortgagee to C not being registered was not admissible, and could not be referred to, so that it was necessary to regard N as still the mortgagor and V as still the mortgagee of the property, while C had, in some capacity or other, the actual possession. That being the state of things, N died in 1883, and it was alleged that he had left a will appointing V his executor, but no probate of that will had been obtained. The equity of redemption remaining in N as mortgagor passed on his death to his executor V. On the 6th May 1885 C sold the property to H (the plaintiff's predecessor), and V joined in the deed of conveyance as executor of N. But it was necessary for the plaintiff to show not merely that he joined as executor, but that he had right, as executor, to convey to H the equity of redemption which had come to him from N. By s. 187 of the Succession Act (X of 1865) the only mode of doing this was by the probate

of N's will, and this had not been obtained. If an heir of N sued for redemption, the defendant would have no defence, unless he could prove that he had acquired the equity of redemption. For this purpose, by s. 187 of the Succession Act (X of 1865) probate would be necessary, and he would consequently be obliged to prove the will and pay duty upon all the property included in it. That would be a liability which the Court could not impose upon a defendant resisting specific performance of a contract like the one made by the plaintiff. Where a vendee ascertained that the title of property sold to him was derived through the will of a former owner which had not been proved. Quære: Whether a notice given by him (the vendee) to the vendor to produce the will and give satisfactory proof, its being the last will of the said owner within four days, was a reasonable notice so as to entitle the vendee afterwards to rescind the contract. A contract of sale provided as follows for the handing of the title-deeds of the property to the purchasers: "And at the time of the execution of the deed of sale you" (i.e., the vendor) "are duly to give us, the purchasers, the title-deeds, vouchers, and bills whatever there may be relating to the said property." Held, that this clause meant that whatever documents of title were necessary under the terms of the contract, or under the general law, should be handed over by the vendor to the vendee at the execution of the deed of sale. The goods were despatched and insured, but before reaching their destination the firm became insolvent, and the plaintiff proceeded to take possession of them, but was prevented on account of the goods being previously attached by the defendant, a judgment-creditor. It was held on plaintiff's suit that the plaintiff was an unpaid vendor, and had a lien on the goods for the price, and might detain the goods till he received or was satisfied about the payment for the said goods, a completed contract for the sale of the goods notwithstanding. An unpaid vendor, in case of the vendees' insolvency, may stop the goods sold in transitu Agents for the purchase of goods have a lien on the goods when purchased for the moneys paid and liabilities incurred by them in respect to such purchase, and are not bound to deliver the goods until they are reimbursed or secured for such advances and liabilities, and an agent in this character is in the position of an unpaid vendor. Where the vendor is not otherwise paid than by having received the insolvent's acceptance, he may, in the event of the purchaser's insolvency, stop the goods, though he may have negotiated the bills, and they are still outstanding and not yet at maturity. Whilst the goods sold remain in the hands of the carrier employed to convey them to their original destination, as between buyer and seller, no case of constructive possession arises, unless when the carrier enters expressly into some new agreement, distinct from the original contract for carriage. So also the mere acts of making or sampling the goods, or giving notice to the carrier to hold the goods for the buyer, though done with intention to take possession, do not establish a constructive possession, or affect the right to stop in transitu. Where the right of stoppage in transitu vests in the consignor, it cannot be defeated by the claims of other creditors of the consignee, the unpaid vendor having an elder and preferential lien. 7. ——— Stoppage in transitu—Railway receipts—Effect of endorsing railway receipts — Title of endorsee of such receipts —Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 103. The firm of C D carried on business in Bombay. A, the agent of the firm, bought from the first defendant H at Bijapur a quantity of wheat which at A's request was on the 28th and 29th May 1889 consigned by H to the firm of C D at Bombay, on the understanding that the consignees were not to have the wheat until they had paid the hundis drawn in respect of it. The wheat was sent to Bombay on the 28th and 29th May 1889, in three consignments, viz., of 56, 104, and 181 bags respectively, and two hundis for R1,000 and R1,500 respectively payable at sight were drawn by A in Bijapur on the firm of C D in Bombay, and were given by him to H, who thereupon handed to A the three railway receipts for the three consignments which had been despatched by the first defendant's agent at Bijapur railway station. The hundis were sent by H to his agent in Bombay for collection. The hundi for R1,000 arrived in Bombay on the 31st May, and was paid on the 1st June. The hundi for R1,500 arrived in Bombay on the 1st June, and was dishonoured on the 2nd June by the firm of C D, which afterwards stopped payment and became insolvent. The railway receipts given by H to A at Bijapur were in the following form : " Received from H the undermentioned goods, 181 bags of wheat. This receipt must be produced by the consignee, or the goods will not be delivered ; if he does not himself attend he must endorse a request for delivery to the person to whom he wishes it made. If the consignment, or this railway receipt, is sold one or more times, the endorsement must be a distinct order to deliver to a certain person or firm, and this order must be on a one-anna stamp. If more than one order appear on the face thereof, each order must bear a stamp. I (we) hereby certify that I (we) am (are) aware that the Southern Mahratta Railway has received the abovementioned goods subject to the conditions noted on the back, and that I (we) agree that it should receive them subject to these conditions. (Sendor's signature.)" On obtaining these railway receipts, A sent them at once to the firm of C D in Bombay, and on the 31st May 1889 they were endorsed by C, a member of the firm, to the second defendant V to secure an advance of R2,000. The endorsement was as follows : " Signature of C D. I have sold the delivery, as per this receipt, to V. The handwriting of C." Two consignments (viz., 56 bags and 104 bags) and part of the third (viz., 73 bags out of 181) had arrived in Bombay by the 2nd June in bags bearing C D's marks. On that day V applied to the Railway Company for delivery, and paid full freight on all three consignments. He was allowed to remove the 55 bags and the 104 bags. After having done this, he loaded his carts with the 73 bags, which had then arrived, out of the consignment of 181 bags without any objection on the part of the Railway Company, but he was not allowed to take them out of the station yard, and the 73 bags were consequently unloaded, and together with the balance of the consignment of 181 bags, which subsequently arrived, were retained by the Railway Company. The reason given by the Company's servants for the detention was the receipt of a telegram sent by H from Bijapur, on hearing of the dishonour of the hundi for R1,500, directing that the 181 bags should not be delivered. At the trial the Judge found that this telegram had probably been received before all of the 73 bags had been loaded into the carts. Held, (i) that there was no such delivery of the 181 bags to C D's agent at Bijapur as to deprive H of his right of stoppage in transitu. (ii) That there was such a delivery of the 73 bags at the railway station to V as to determine H's right of stoppage in transitu. It was to be assumed that H's telegram did not arrive in time to prevent the bags being placed, with the consent of the Railway Company, on V's carts, for it was not until the carts had been loaded that the Company's servants interfered to prevent their leaving the station yard. Before that time the freight for the 73 bags had been paid by V and the railway receipt had been given up to the Company duly signed by V's servant. Everything had been done on the part of the Company to divest themselves of their lien as carriers ; for the mere fact that the carts were still standing in the goods compound of the railway station after the bags had been placed on them could not affect the question, there being no suggestion that the matter as between the Company and V had not been completely settled. Disputes arose between plaintiffs and defendant, and in February 1893 the defendant obtained an order from the Mamlatdar in a possessory suit against the plaintiffs directing the plaintiffs to give up possession of the property to him. In August 1893 an agreement was made between them, in pursuance of which the defendant executed a rent-note to the plaintiffs promising to give up the property to the plaintiffs at the end of four months on payment by the plaintiffs of R100. On the 25th November 1896 the plaintiffs brought this suit for possession, alleging that the defendant refused to give up the property. The District Judge dismissed the suit, finding that the plaintiffs had not paid the R100, and holding that the defendant was therefore justified in putting an end to the contract contained in the rent-note. Held (reversing the decree), that the evidence showed the transaction to be a sale of the property by the defendant to the plaintiff for R100, possession being given to the plaintiff under the lease for four months; that the sale was a completed transaction, although the R100 had not been paid, and that the only remedy of the defendant was to sue for the amount. 11. ——— Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 55—Implied covenant for title—Acts amounting to waiver of covenant —Possession taken under contract — Right to recover unpaid purchase-money—Lien. On 16th August 1885 the defendant, having agreed to purchase a house belonging to the plaintiff, executed an agreement, in which it was stated "that he had this day purchased the house belonging to Ghousiah Begum Sahiba (plaintiff) for R16,000, that he had paid R1,000 as an advance and taken possession, that he would pay the balance with interest at the rate of R1 per cent. per mensem within fifteen days, and obtain a sale-deed from the said Begum." The plaintiff at the time of the agreement had not obtained a conveyance of the house to her, and was not able to tender a conveyance to the defendant until January 1887, when she did so. Meanwhile the defendant took possession under the agreement, paying only a portion of the balance of the purchase-money; he also executed certain repairs to the house, and let it to a tenant and enjoyed the rent. It further appeared that shortly after the above agreement he sought to obtain a sale-deed from the plaintiff and attempted to raise a sum of money on a mortgage of the house. On 22nd December 1885 the defendant wrote to the plaintiff demanding a conveyance and giving notice that, if the sale be not completed in the following month, the interest on the balance of the purchase-money should cease; but no evidence was given as to any appropriation of the purchase-money by the defendant. In 1887 the plaintiff filed the present suit to recover the unpaid purchase-money with interest at 12 per cent. Held, that the acts of the defendant amounted to a waiver of the implied covenant for title, and that the plaintiff was entitled to recover the unpaid purchase-money with interest at the agreed rate up to the date of payment, and that he was further entitled to a lien on the property for that amount. (4)—Vendor's statutory charge in respect of unpaid purchase-money—Effect of contract to defer payment—Certificate of appeal—Act XIV of 1882, ss. 595* (c) and 600. Under s. 55, sub-s. (4), of the Transfer of Property Act, a vendor has a statutory charge upon the whole of property sold, in the hands both of the purchaser and of those claiming under him, for the whole of the unpaid balance of purchase-money, unless there be a clear contract to the contrary between the parties. This charge is different in its origin and nature from the vendor's lien as created by Courts of Equity. It is not excluded by a mere personal contract to defer payment of a portion of the purchase-money, or to take the purchase-money by instalments, or by any contract, covenant or agreement, with respect to the purchase-money, which is not inconsistent with the continuance of the charge. 17. ——— Vendor's lien for unpaid purchase-money—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 55, sub-s. 4, cl. (b)—"Contract to the contrary"—Sale in consideration of a particular covenant—Waiver—Charge on property sold, abandonment of—Appeal to Privy Council—Certificate of appeal, form of—"Substantial question of law"—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 596, 600. The charge, which a vendor obtains under s. 55 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882) is different in its origin and nature from the vendor's lien given by the English Courts of equity to an unpaid vendor. The Indian Act gives a statutory charge upon the estate to an unpaid vendor, unless it be excluded by contract, and such a charge stands in quite a different position from a vendor's lien under the English law. Such a charge is not excluded by a mere personal contract to defer payment of a portion of the purchase-money, or to take the purchase-money by instalments, nor by any contract, covenant or agreement with respect to the purchase-money, which is not inconsistent with the continuance of the charge. Semble : The English cases as to a a vendor's lien for unpaid purchase-money, though useful for the purpose of illustration, are not authoritative in the interpretation of the law on the subject, as laid down in s. 55 of the Transfer of Property Act. A conveyance or sale in consideration of a covenant to pay a sum of money in the future is different from a sale in consideration of money, which the purchaser covenants to pay. In this case the High Court had held on the authority of the English cases that the purchase was one in consideration of a particular covenant, and that consequently no charge on the property arose : but, held, by the Judicial Committee, that the conveyance was made in consideration of a sum of money part of which was paid down and the payment of the balance of which was deferred, and that there was therefore no contract excluding the operation of the charge. Held, also, on the evidence, that there had been no waiver or abandonment of the charge by the vendor. The certificate of the High Court that "the case was a fit one for appeal to His Majesty in Council" was held to be correct in form, and not subject to the objection that it did not state that a substantial question of law was involved in the case. *Tassaduq Rasul Khan v. money and was put into possession. The plaintiff then brought a suit (No. 327 of 1884) against A praying for a dissolution of the partnership. V was also a party defendant to that suit. The plaintiff alleged that R35,000 was much too low a price for the press, and he objected to the sale. He prayed that V might be restrained from continuing in possession of the press and working it, and that a receiver might be appointed to take possession of it until further orders. On the 21st April 1885, on a motion, the Court refused to grant an injunction and receiver, but ordered V to pay R30,000 (i.e., the balance of the purchase-money) to the solicitors of the parties of investment until the hearing of the suit, and directed that, if that sum was not paid by the 21st May 1885, a receiver should be appointed to take possession of the press. The suit (i.e., No. 327 of 1884) was heard on the 15th February 1887, when it was held by the Court that the sale by A to V was without authority; that the defendant V took nothing under it, and that the plaintiff was entitled to have it set aside. Certain matters still remained to be decided, but on the 28th February 1887 the decree in the suit was made, giving effect to the findings already arrived at on the 15th February. The decree by consent directed various accounts to be taken, and, among others, an account of the profits realised by the working of the press by the defendant V since his possession thereof, credit being given to him for all sums expended by him in the repairs, maintenance, and working of the said press and for the management thereof by him. The decree further ordered that the defendant V should be repaid the R30,000 which he had paid under the order of the 21st April 1885, and directed "that on such payment the said defendant V do forthwith give over possession of the press to the plaintiff and the defendant A." The defendant V at once gave notice of his intention to appeal. There was some delay in drawing up the decree. The minutes were spoken to on the 31st March 1887; the decree was sealed on the 13th April 1887. Meantime, on the 6th April 1887, and while the defendant V was still in possession, a fire broke out in the press, and much damage was done. Subsequently to the sealing of the decree as above stated, the press in its damaged condition was handed over to the plaintiff's firm by V, who also desisted from prosecuting his appeal, the injury to the press having made it contrary to his interest to appeal. In May 1887 the plaintiff filed the present suit, claiming to recover R50,000 from the defendant V as the value of the press, or such further sum as might be necessary to rebuild and restore it. He alleged that the fire was caused by the working of the press, and contended that the working of the press by the defendant V after the decree of the 28th February was an act of trespass by him, and that therefore, independently of the question whether the fire was caused by the negligence of V and his servants, the said V was liable for the loss occasioned by the fire. Held, that, independently of negligence, the defendant V was not liable to the plaintiff for the loss occasioned by the fire. Down to the decree of the 28th February 1887 the defendant in keeping possession of the press and working it was, no doubt, a trespasser, but subsequently to that decree he remained in possession and worked the press with the consent of the plaintiff. The maxim volenti non fit injuria applied to the circumstances of the case. Held, also, that, no negligence having been proved against the defendant, the suit must be dismissed. The heir of one of the vendors sold his share of such estate to A, and A sued R to redeem such share. Held, by the Full Bench (STUART, C.J.; doubting), that the nature of the transaction between R and his vendors must be determined by looking at both the conveyance and the agreement, and both those documents being regarded, the transaction between them was one of mortgage, and the vendors had a right of redemption, and the proviso in the agreement was inequitable and incapable of enforcement against them or their representatives in title. Held, also, by PEARSON, J., that the

13. ——— Champerty and maintenance—Suit by person out of possession, but entitled to possession—Hindu Law—Deed of sale of share in taluk in consideration of funds for suit to recover it—Public policy—Evidence of adoption. In order to provide funds to prosecute his claim to the Birwa Mehnon taluk a deed of sale, in favour of the respondent, of a moiety of the taluk was in 1888 executed, whilst out of possession by a person, who (if the adoption as successor to the Mankapur Raj of the head of a senior branch of the family in 1681 were proved) was entitled to succeed to the taluk as being the son of the collateral, who was the nearest heir when the succession opened out in 1879 on the death of the daughter of the original talukdar, whose husband, the appellant, then obtained possession. The taluk was one in lists 1 and 2 under Act I of 1869 and devolved on a single heir, though not descending by the rules of lineal primogeniture. The respondent as co-plaintiff with his vendor brought a suit against the appellant to recover possession of the taluk. The vendor entered into a compromise and withdrew from the suit, which was prosecuted by the respondent alone. The validity of the deed of sale was impeached by the appellant on the ground that it was champertous and contrary to public policy, it being contended that the suit was therefore not maintain-sale. Held, by the Judicial Committee (affirming the decision of the Court of the Judicial Commissioners of Oudh), that the transaction was a present transfer by the vendor of a moiety of his interest, in the taluk giving a good title to the respondent, on which it was competent to him to sue. The vendor could not have prosecuted his claim to the estate without assistance; there was nothing extortionate or unreasonable in the terms of the bargain, no gambling in litigation, and nothing contrary to public policy. Held, also, with regard to the adoption, that notwithstanding it took place so long ago that it was impossible to prove that all requisite ceremonies were duly and regularly performed, and although no change of gotra occurred, evidence in favour of the adoption preponderated: a body of strong and persistent tradition preserved in the wajib-ul-arz of the Mankapur Raj and recorded in the Oudh Gazetteer and Gonda Settlement Report was in favour of it; it had been supported by the appellant in former litigation, and no claim to the Birwa Mehnon taluk had ever been set up by any member of the Mankapur family, with which the adoption had been made. The decision of the Judicial Commissioner's Court upholding the adoption was therefore affirmed. ACHAL RAM v. KAZIM HUSAIN KHAN (1905) . I. L. R. 27 All. 271

9. ——— Criminal Procedure Code, 1882, s. 303. Although s. 303 of the Criminal Procedure Code empowers a Judge to ask the jury such questions as are necessary to ascertain what their verdict is, it was never contemplated that, on ascertaining that the jury are not unanimous, the Judge should make minute inquiries to learn the nature of the majority and its opinion, so that he should have the opportunity of accepting or refusing that opinion as a verdict according as it coincides with his own opinion or not. Whatever may be the opinion of the Judge, if he goes so far as to ask the jury what is the exact majority, and what is the opinion of the majority, he ought to receive that verdict with hesitation, and if he differs from it he should proceed as directed by s. 307. 10. ——— Criminal Procedure Code, 1872, s. 263. In a case in which the accused was tried on charges of murder, culpable homicide, and causing grievous hurt, the jury acquitted him of murder, but convicted him on the other counts. This verdict was recorded by the Sessions Judge, who then, in accordance with s. 263, Criminal Procedure Code, 1872, questioned the jury as to the grounds for their verdict, and the jury eventually intimated their willingness to convict of murder. The Sessions Judge differed from the first verdict of the jury, but as he had recorded that verdict, he doubted whether he could accept the second verdict, and referred the case to the High Court under s. 263. Held, that s. 263 did not apply to such a case as this. There could be no verdict delivered, and no verdict finally recorded, until the last of the questions put by the Judge to the jury was answered; and as it appeared from the answers of the jury that their findings of facts disclosed that the verdict ought to have been one of guilty on the charge of murder, the Judge should have entered the verdict of the jury as one of guilty of murder. The case was accordingly returned to the Judge to enable him to do that, and to pass such sentence as the law directed. It is only when it is necessary in order to ascertain what the verdict of a jury really is, that a Judge is justified under s. 263 in putting questions to the jury. 11. ——— Special verdict—Question put by Judge to jury after special verdict—Penal Code, s. 330. The prisoners were tried under s. 330 of the Penal Code (for voluntarily causing hurt to a girl, and under s. 348 (for wrongfully confining her). Circumstances of aggravation were alleged, as lifting up and using a sword, of lowering the girl into a well, and of pricking her with thorns. The jury in their verdict stated that they disbelieved these allegations and also the charge of illegal confinement, but that they believed that some slaps had been given. The Judge then asked the jury whether they convicted on either, and, if so, which head of charge. They answered that they believed the prisoners had beaten the girl, and they convicted them under s. 330. Held, that the question put by the Judge to the jury was a proper one, and not one of law. The conviction upheld. Such a case is not governed by the rules of English law as to special verdicts. QUEEN v. HARI PROSAD GANGOOLY

12. ——— Special verdict—Criminal Procedure Code, 1882, ss. 298 and 302—Duty of Sessions Judge. The accused was tried for rape. The jury, after considering their verdict, announced through their foreman that the accused "did the act with consent." The Sessions Judge thereupon, without requiring them to reconsider their verdict or giving them any fresh directions, asked them whether they found the accused guilty or not guilty. The jury again retired and brought in a verdict of guilty, upon which the Sessions Judge sentenced the prisoner to three years' rigorous imprisonment. Held, reversing the conviction and sentence, that the first verdict of the jury being a special verdict, and there being no real ambiguity about it, the Sessions Judge was bound, under s. 302 of the Code of Criminal Precedure (Act X of 1882) to recover the verdict and apply the law thereto. Held, also, that the second verdict could not be sustained, as there was nothing to show that the Sessions Judge gave the jury any fresh directions or explained to them that a finding that the woman had consented was tantamount to an acquittal. 13. ——— Murder—Culpable homicide—Grave and sudden provocation—Loss of self-control—Criminal Procedure Code, 1882, s. 238. The accused was tried for murder. The first verdict of the jury was "guilty of murder under grave and sudden provocation." The Sessions Judge told the jury that it was their duty, after considering the question of provocation to return a simple verdict of guilty or not guilty. The jury therefore brought in a second verdict of "not guilty." The Judge, considering this verdict to be perverse, referred the case to the High Court under s. 307 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1882). Held, that the direction given to the jury after the first verdict was wrong, as the case fell under s. 238 of the Criminal Precedure Code (Act X of 1882). Although the charge was only one of murder, the jury had a right to bring in a verdict of culpable homicide, if there was grave and sudden provocation so as to deprive the prisoner of the power of self-control. Held, also, that the jury were not bound to find a simple verdict of guilty or not guilty. They might have found a special verdict, or findings on matters of fact to which the Judge applies the law. Held, also, that the first verdict was a verdict

The jury disbelieved the evidence as to the unlawful assembly, but unanimously found two of the accused guilty of grievous hurt under s. 325. Held, that such verdict was, under s. 457 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, legally sustainable, although that offence did not form the subject of a separate charge. S. 457 enables a verdict to be given on some of the facts which are a component part of the original charge, provided that those facts constitute a minor offence. The jury unanimously acquitted the prisoners of the three original charges, and a majority of the jury (four out of five) acquitted them also of the last charge. The Sessions Judge agreed with the verdict of the jury as regarded the three original charges, and recorded a formal order acquitting and discharging the prisoners on these three charges. He differed from the majority as to the fourth charge, and referred the case to the High Court under s. 263 of the Criminal Procedure Code. Held, that where (as in this case) the Sessions Judge had approved of a verdict on certain charges and finally acquitted and discharged the accused as to these charges, the High Court could not under s. 263 convict on the facts on these very charges. That section seems to contemplate only a case in which, without recording any order of acquittal or conviction, the Sessions Judge refers the whole case. As there was nothing in this case to show on what grounds the majority of the jury acquitted the prisoners on the additional charge, and as the Sessions Judge agreed with the unanimous verdict as to the three original charges, the High Court presumed that the reason which weighed with the majority of the jury in finding the prisoners not guilty on the additional charge must have weighed with the whole jury in finding them not guilty on all the

The accused was a karkun in the Nazir's office, and it was his duty to keep the accounts of moneys received in the office from judgment-debtors, and of moneys paid out to decree-holders. He was charged with abetting the misappropriation of three sums, viz., R20 on the 19th November 1885, R45 on the 23rd November 1885, and R10 on the 26th June 1886. As to the first sum, it was alleged that an instalment of R25 due under a decree had been paid into the Nazir's office by a judgment-debtor on the 19th November 1885, but the accused had entered in the office day-book only R5, thereby enabling the balance of R20 to be misappropriated. It appeared, however, that a sum of R25, being the instalment due to the decree-holder under the above decree, had been in due course paid out to him on the 4th December 1885. As to the second sum of R45, it was alleged that a sum of R50 had been paid in, but only R5 had been entered by the accused, the balance being misappropriated. It appeared, however, in this case also that the full amount of the instalment, viz., R50, had been duly paid out to the decree-holder a few days after its receipt. As to the third sum, it was alleged that the total receipts entered in the book on the 26th June 1886 were R55, but the figure entered as the total was only R45, and that the balance of R10 had been misappropriated. The jury found the accused guilty on all three charges. On appeal by him, it was contended that there was no evidence of the misappropriation of the specific sums in respect of which he was charged. There was evidence of a general deficiency; but there was no evidence that these specific sums formed part of that deficiency. On the contrary, the evidence showed that the instalments paid into the office had been duly paid out to the persons to whom they were payable. Held, that, the jury having had the facts brought to their notice, their verdict was final, and the High Court would not interfere with the verdict. The provisions of s. 167 of the Evidence Act (I of 1872) apply to criminal trials by jury. When part of the evidence which has been allowed to go to the jury is found to be irrelevant and inadmissible, it is open to the High Court in appeal either to uphold the verdict upon the remaining evidence on the record under s. 167 of the Indian Evidence Act (I of 1872) or to quash the verdict and order a re-trial. The law, as settled in England by the Queen v. Gibson, L. R. 18 Q. B. D. 537, and as stated by the Privy Council in Makin v. Attorney General of New South Wales, [1894] A. C. 57, 69, 70, with reference to the granting of new trials where evidence has been improperly admitted, does not apply to India. Wafadar Khan v. *Queen-Empress, I. L. 26. ——— Special verdict—Murder—Culpable homicide—Grave and sudden provocation—Loss of self-control—Criminal Procedure Code, 1882, s. 307—High Court's power of interfering with the verdict of a jury. The accused was tried for murder. The first verdict of the jury was "guilty of murder under grave and sudden provocation." The Sessions Judge told the jury that it was their duty, after considering the question of provocation, to return a simple verdict of guilty or not guilty. The jury, therefore, brought in a second verdict of "not guilty." The Judge, considering this verdict to be perverse, referred the case to the High Court under s. 307 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1882). Held, that the High Court will not interfere with the verdict of a jury unless it is shown to be clearly and manifestly wrong. A verdict ought to be considered a proper and not a perverse verdict if it is one which reasonable men might find on the facts in evidence. Queen-Empress v. *Dada Ana, I. L. In such a case, cl. (d) of s. 423 of the Criminal Procedure Code, does not stand in the way of the appellate Court's interfering with the verdict of the jury. The Sessions Judge disagreed with the verdict and submitted the case to the High Court under s. 307 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882). The Judges of the High Court (JARDINE and CANDY, JJ.) differing in opinion, the case was laid before a third Judge (SARGENT, C.J.) under s. 429, who held that the verdict of the jury should be set aside, and that the prisoner was guilty of murder. Per SARGENT, C.J.—It is the uniform practice of the High Court, in cases referred under s. 307 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882), not to interfere with the verdict of a jury except when it is clearly and manifestly wrong. There is no true analogy between the discretionary power conferred on the High Court under this section and that which the Courts of law in England have exercised in interfering with the finding of a jury in civil actions by directing a new trial on the ground of the verdict being against the weight of evidence. The practice, therefore, of the latter Courts, although very properly regarded as a guide, cannot be resorted to as affording a fixed rule in the exercise of the powers conferred on the High Court by s. 307. Where a prisoner was charged with murder by administering dhatura poison to the deceased, the majority of the jury found him not guilty. After the delivery of the verdict, the Sessions Judge questioned the jury, who, in reply to specific questions on the points, stated through their foreman that the majority had doubts (i) whether the accused had fetched dhatura from a certain field; (ii) whether there was dhatura poison in the stomach of the deceased; (iii) whether the death of the deceased was caused by dhatura poison. The Sessions Judge differed so completely with the jury on the evidence that he submitted the case to the High Court under s. 307 of the Criminal Procedure Code. Per JARDINE, J.—The verdict of acquittal should be upheld. It was not manifestly wrong nor absolutely unreasonable. It was a verdict that reasonable but cautious men might find. The Sessions Judge ought not to have put to the jury, after verdict delivered, the questions which he did put as to their findings on particular points. In so doing the Sessions Judge exceeded the limits of questioning defined in s. 303 of the Criminal Procedure Code. There was no incompleteness nor ambiguity in the verdict and no misconception of any question of law. Per CANDY, J.—Admitting in the present case that the Sessions Judge was wrong in putting any questions to the jury after the verdict was delivered, disregarding the answers to the questions and dealing solely with the evidence and probabilities, there seemed to be no reasonable doubt of the guilt of the accused. The High Court, in the exercise of its powers under s. 307 of the Criminal Procedure Code, is bound to act upon its own view of the evidence. On a reference by a Sessions Judge, the whole case is opened up. When the verdict of the jury is erroneous, the High Court must put it aside and exercise the functions of both Judge and jury, giving due weight to the opinion of the Judge as well as to the verdict of the jury. When a case like the present depends upon the inferences to be drawn from two or three facts, neither principle nor statute forbids the Sessions Judge from asking the jury to state a plain concise finding on those facts. Where the Judges of the High Court differed in opinion in a case referred by a Sessions Judge to the High Court under s. 307 of the Criminal Procedure Code, the Court (JARDINE and CANDY, JJ.) directed that the case should be laid before a third Judge of the High Court, being of opinion

29. ——— Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882), s. 423—Setting aside verdict of the jury—Power of Appellate Court to deal with the case. If the verdict of the jury is set aside on any of the grounds mentioned in cl. (d) of s. 423 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882), then there is no restriction on the powers of the Appellate Court to deal with a case of which it has complete seizin in any of the manners provided in that section. Both offences are triable, and the accused were, in fact, tried, by a jury, who, by their verdict, acquitted both of the accused of the charges framed under the sections referred to, but found first accused guilty of voluntarily causing grievous hurt—an offence which is triable, not by a jury, but by assessors. The Sessions Judge acquitted both accused in respect of the charges under s. 392 and s. 397, but convicted first accused of having voluntarily caused grievous hurt, under s. 325. Against that conviction first accused preferred this appeal, when it was objected that, inasmuch as the trial had been held before a jury, the appeal lay on matter of law only, and not on questions of fact. Held, per BENSON, J., that the conviction of the first accused for causing grievous hurt was not one by a jury, but by the Judge, who treated the finding of the jury in regard to the grievous hurt as the opinion of assessors. An appeal therefore lay on the facts, as in the case of Muthusami Pillai v. Queen-Empress, I. L. R. 26 Mad. 243 n., and in Empress v. *Mohim Chunder Rai, I. L. R. 3 Calc. 765. find, as an incident to such trial, that certain facts only are proved in the trial, which facts constitute a minor offence, and return a verdict of guilty of such offence, though such minor offence be not triable by a jury. And that a Sessions Judge may thereupon record judgment, convicting the accused of such minor offence, although he is not charged with it and tried on such a charge by the Sessions Judge with the aid of the jurors as assessors. The jury having found first accused guilty of causing grievous hurt, and the Judge having given judgment convicting him of the same, an appeal lay only on a point of law, as the accused had been convicted in a trial by jury. The High Court in such a case is not bound to accept the opinion of the jury if it is not shown to be perverse or clearly or manifestly wrong. VOLUNTARY PAYMENT—contd.

1. ——— Money paid, but not due, and paid under compulsion—Contract Act (IX 1872), ss. 15, 72. In execution of a decree, the plaintiff puchased certain property. Subsequently the defendant, in execution of another decree against the former owner of the property, proceeded to execute his decree against the same property. The plaintiff thereupon preferred a claim which was disallowed, as he had not then obtained, and consequently could not produce, the sale-certificate. In order to prevent the sale, he then paid the amount of the defendant's decree into Court, and subsequently instituted a suit against the defendant to recover the amount so paid into Court, to prevent the sale. The defendant contended that the amount was paid voluntarily and could not be recovered back. Held, following Dooli Chand v. Ram Kishen Singh, L. R. 8 I. A. 93 : I. L. R. 7 Calc. 648, that it was not a voluntary payment; and that the plaintiff was entitled to a decree. Fatima Khatoon Chowdrain v. Mahomed Jan Chowdhry, 12 Moo. I. A. 65 : 10 W. R. P. 2. ——— Money paid under protest——Right of suit—Contract of indemnity—Contract Act ss. 124, 141, 142.* The Thakor of Limdi possesses several talukhdari villages in the Ahmedabad District, for which he pays a lump jumma to Government. One of these villages was Akru. Disputes arose between the Thakor and the grassias of Akru as to the ownership of the village. The Thakor filed a suit against the grassias, which was ultimately compromised, and a consent decree was passed in 1883, providing, inter alia, that the Thakor should assign to the grassias a moiety of the village; that the grassias should hold the same free from all liability to pay the jumma, and that the Thakor should alone be responsible for all Government demands. In accordance with this decree, a moiety of the village was made over to the grassias. The Collector demanded jummabandi for this moiety. The Thakor intervened, and objected to the demand, on the ground that he paid a lump jumma for the whole of his talukh including the moiety of the village assigned to the grassias. Government, however, passed a resolution declaring that half of the village belonged to the grassias; that from them the Government had a right to levy the jumma; that the Thakor might, if he chose, pay the same on behalf of the grassias, and that, if it was not paid, it would be recovered by attachment and sale of the grassias, half share. The Thakor thereupon paid the jumma on behalf of the grassias for two years, and then filed a suit against Government to recover back the payments he had made, and for a declaration that Government had no right to levy any assessment on any portion of the village beyond the lump jumma fixed for his talukh. This suit was dismissed on the preliminary ground that the Thakor had no cause of action against Government in respect of any of the reliefs sought, the Court being of opinion that the payments he had made to Government on account of the grassias were voluntary, and that he had no interest whatever in the grassias' half share of the village. Held, reversing the decision of the lower Court, that the suit would lie. Under the consent-decree, the Thakor stood in the relation of an insurer to the grassias from all exactions of Government dues. The payments of jumma he made on account of the grassias were therefore not voluntary, but made under protest, and as such were recoverable by suit. 3. ——— Money paid for benefit of another—Contract Act (IX of 1872), ss. 69 and 70—Money paid to protect property from sale in execution of decree for arrears of rent. Certain immoveable property was inherited by S, the mother, of the plaintiff, from her husband, and during her tenure of it she alienated it by deed of sale to the defendants. S died in April 1890, and the estate then devolved upon the plaintiff, an only daughter (there being no male issue). In 1890 the property in possession of the defendants was, at the suit of a person who was the landlord, ordered to be sold together with other properties of the defendants for arrears of rent, due in the lifetime of S, and to prevent the sale the plaintiff paid the amount of the decree. In a suit for possession of the property and for a refund of the sum paid by the plaintiff to stop the sale, the defendants claimed an absolute interest in the property, but the Courts below found that the alienations by S to the defendants were not made for legal necessity and were therefore invalid. Held, that the payment made by the plaintiff was not a voluntary payment, but was one which she was entitled to recover from the defendants. It being a question at the time whether the property belonged to the plaintiff or to the defendants, the payment to stop the sale was one in which the plaintiff was interested sufficiently to bring the case within s. 69 of the Contract Act. S. 70 was also applicable, as the payment relieved the defendants from liability to their landlord, and was made for the defendants, and not gratuitously, and the defendants enjoyed the benefit of such payment. The principles laid down in the cases of Duli Chand v. Ramkishen Singh, I. L. R. 7 Calc. 648 : L. R. 8 I. A. 93; Smith v. *Dinonath Mookerjee, I. L. stipulated that, if the decretal amount were not paid within a certain date, it was to be increased to R52,000. On the 14th March 1891 the plaintiff applied for execution of that decree, and claimed the larger amount, as admittedly the smaller amount was not paid within the stipulated period. The Subordinate Judge allowed the plaintiff's claim. The defendant appealed to the High Court, and on the 31st September 1891 the order of the Subordinate Judge was reversed, and an inquiry was directed as to the conduct of the plaintiff in the matter. On the 31st August 1892 the Subordinate Judge held that the plaintiff had been guilty of misconduct, and that the decree had been fully satisfied. The plaintiff appealed from this order to the High Court, and on the 4th January 1894 the appeal was dismissed, and he preferred an appeal to Her Majesty in Council. In the meantime on the 13th May 1892 the plaintiff had paid a certain sum of money to protect the patni talukh from sale for arrears of rent due to the landlord. In a suit brought to recover from the defendant the amount so paid :—Held, that the payment was not a voluntary payment, and that the plaintiff was interested in the payment of the money, and therefore he was entitled to recover it. 6. ——— Payment of decree for rent by purchaser at sale for arrears of rent——Contract Act (IX of 1872), ss. 69, 70—Suit to recover money so due. Rent is by operation of law the first charge on a tenure, and a person who purchases the same at any execution-sale must, in the absence of anything to denote the contrary, be taken to purchase it, charged with the rent which is due in respect of it at the time of its purchase and there being no privity between him and the judgment-debtor, he cannot recover from the latter the money which he is obliged to pay for the rent so due at the time of the purchase. So where a plaintiff, in execution of a mortgage-decree, purchased the tenure mortgaged, and then paid the money due under a decree obtained by the landlord against the tenure-holder for arrears of rent for the period anterior to the confirmation of sale :—Held, that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover the money paid by him for satisfying the rent decree. 1. ——————————Wagering contract—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 30. In order that a transaction may fall within s. 30 of the Indian Contract Act, there must be at least two parties, the agreement between whom must be by way of wager and both side must be parties to the wager. It is of the essence of a wager that each side should stand to win or lose, according to the uncertain or unascertained event, in reference to which the chance or risk is taken: in other words, to make an agreement a wager there must be a common intention to bet. SASSOON v. TOKERSEY (1904) . . . I. L. R. 28 Bom. 616

2. ——————————Principal and agent—Sale and purchase by the agent on his own account—Usage of trade—Commission agents—Pakki adat system—Tender of evidence as to delivery at other vaidas—Relevancy of such evidence. The defendant, a resident of the North-West Provinces, from time to time sent orders to the plaintiffs in Bombay to sell and purchase cotton on his account. The plaintiffs carried out the defendant's orders as they were received. Up to the due date they had purchased on behalf of the defendant 400 bales more than they had sold. It appeared that by reason of other contracts entered into with the merchants, from whom they had purchased on behalf of the defendant, the plaintiffs had 'cancelled' all these purchases, before the due date. The defendant neither sent money to pay for the cotton nor did he direct the plaintiffs to sell on his behalf. The plaintiffs sued the defendant describing themselves as commission agents for their commission and for the loss on 400 bales sold on defendant's account. The plaintiffs were unable to show that they had paid any damages on account of the defendant, for failure to take delivery, to any of the merchants from whom they had purchased on defendant's account. The suit was dismissed in the lower Court on the ground that the contracts were wagering contracts. In appeal the plaintiffs contended that they were entitled as between themselves and the defendant to treat themselves as the principals, on the ground that the business was conducted on the pakki adat system, under which no privity was established between the defendant and the merchants to whom or from whom cotton was sold or bought on his account. Held, that if the plaintiffs were, as their plaint stated, commission agents, and they were employed by the defendant as his commission agents, and as such, under instructions and on account of the defendant, entered into these purchases, they had no cause of action. Held, further, that the usage termed the pakki adat system involved a material departure from the ordinary relations between a principal and his agent of which there was no suggestion, in the pleadings or issues, nor was there any evidence to prove it. The plaintiffs must therefore be held to the case they had made.

During the course of the hearing in the lower Court it appeared that at the vaida for which the contracts in question had been made the plaintiffs had neither given nor taken delivery of any cotton. They tendered evidence to show that at other vaidas they had given or taken delivery of cotton and other goods. The learned judge rejected the evidence as irrelevant to the issue, whether the contracts were wagering contracts. Held, on appeal, that the evidence tendered was relevant and should have been admitted. 3. ——————————Agreement to pay differences—Surrounding circumstances—Form of contract not of moment—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 30—Bombay Act III of 1865. The law which is contained in s. 30 of the Contract Act (IX of 1872) and in Bombay Act III of 1865, is that the Court must not only consider the terms, in which the parties have chosen to embody their agreement, but must look to the whole nature of the transaction or institution, whatever it may be, and must prove among all the surrounding circumstances, including the conduct of the parties, with a view to ascertain what in truth was the real intention or understanding between the parties to the bargain. The actual form of the contract is of little moment, for gamblers cannot be allowed to force the jurisdiction of the Courts by the expedient of inserting provisions, which might in certain events become operative, to compel the passing of property, though neither party anticipated such a contingency. The Court should be astute to discover what in fact was the common intention of both parties and should do all that is possible to see through the ostensible and apparent transaction into the underlying reality of the bargain. The plaintiff was 17 years old at the time the suit was instituted, and she did not sue by a next friend. No objection was taken by the defendants, on the ground that the plaintiff could not sue without a next friend, until the case came before the Court of first appeal, at which time the plaintiff had attained majority. Held, that, seeing no objection was taken to the suit on the ground that the plaintiff should have sued by a next friend until after she had attained her majority, the irregularity was waived. 11. ——— Waiver of grounds of enhancement.—Reliance on one ground only—Presumption. In a suit for enhancement of rent upon different grounds, the fact that at the hearing the plaintiff relies on one of the grounds only, and that in the judgment of the first Court the whole case was rested on that ground only, is not a safe warrant for the inference that the other grounds were waived. BONOMALEE CHURN MYTEE v. SHOROOP HOOTAIT 14 W. R. 60

12. ——— Objection as to absence of demand for enhanced rent—Objection as to want of parties—Objection taken for first time on appeal. Where in a suit for rent at an enhanced rate no objection as to the absence of legal demand for enhanced rent was taken :—Held, that the suit was properly tried by the Court of first instance on the merits. The lower Appellate Court having dismissed the suit on the ground that the inamdar was not a party to the suit, a point on which no issue was raised, although it had been taken in the written statement and which was not made a ground of appeal. Held, also, that the point must be considered to have been abandoned at the trial ; it was therefore not open to the lower Appellate Court to dismiss the suit on that ground. 13. ——— Waiver of right to execute decree—Agreement to give time to debtor—New contract. The granting of a judgment-debtor the indulgence of a temporary stay of the warrant of execution issued to inforce the decree does not prejudice the judgment-creditor's right to execution at a subsequent time. 14. ——— Waiver where decree-holder was allowed to perform act under decree in case judgment-debtor failed to do so. H C obtained a decree agaist G R for the reconstruction in the family house, within one month, of a verandah which had been improperly pulled down by the latter ; on failure of G R to rebuild it in the specified time, the decree-holder was to be allowed to rebuild it himself at the cost of G R. About a month after the reconstruction was begun, but after the lapse of the month allowed to the judgment-debtor, H C applied for an injunction to stop the work as not being according to the decree, and for permission to rebuild it himself. Held, notwithstanding G R had made alterations and contravened the decretal order, that the judgment-creditors' conduct in looking on without remonstrance for nearly a month while the judgment-debtor incurred considerable expense amounted to a waiver of his right to take matters into his own hands. 15. ——— Waver of right to interest on arrears of rent—Receipt of arrears of rent for long time without interest. By the terms of a kabuliat, rent not paid when due was to bear interest. The zamindar received rent for a period of ten years without making any demand of interest in respect of arrears, and without claiming to apply any portion of the payments towards the discharge of interest. Having subsequently brought a suit for interest, the Courts below were of opinion that the zamindar had waived his claim to interest and dismissed his suit. Held, that there were facts justifying such an inference, and that their finding could not be reviewed in special appeal. 17. ——— Omission to claim interest—Pleading. Both parties stipulated for payment of rent on certain dates, and, if not so paid, of a certain rate of interest until paid. The rent not having been paid at the time agreed on :—Held, that the landlord's omission to claim interest, instalment by instalment, for the fractional time that the rent was not paid after it become due, did not justify the plea that the interest stipulated for was not due, or warrant the belief that the plaintiff had waived his claim to interest. 18. ——— Waiver of objection to service of notice of enhancement—Omission to appeal from decision finding notice properly served—Question of law and fact. Plaintiff sued to recover rents at enhanced rates after notice, and got a decree. Defendants appealed on the merits, tacitly accepting the finding of the lower Court that notice had been duly served. On appeal, the Subordinate Judge of his own motion took up the question of notice, decided that it had not been duly served, and reserved the decree of the lower Court. Held, that the Subordinate Judge was wrong, for, seeing that the defendants had not appealed from the finding of the first Court which declared that there had been good service, it might fairly be presumed that they had due notice of the claim to enhance, until evidence sufficient to rebut that presumption should be shown. An objection that notice of enhancement has not been properly served is not an objection purely law, but a mixed objection of law and fact, which may be impliedly waived by the conduct of the parties. Chunder Monee Dossee v. Dhuroneedhur Lahory, 7 W. R., 2, cited and distinguished. SHUSHEE BHOOSUN v. MUDDUN MOHUN CHUTTOPADHIYA 2 C. L. R. 297

19. ——— Agreement come to under mistaken belief—Agreement to accept provision in satisfaction of claim to maintenance—Mutual mistake, effect of—Suit by son for partition—Relinquishment of claim. The plaintiff's father, a member of an undivided Hindu family, signed an agreement by which he agreed to accept a provision in satisfaction of his claim for maintenance. The agreement was signed by reason of a mistaken belief entertained by the plaintiff's father and the other members of the family that there existed an established custom in the family which rendered the property indivisible. Held, in a suit by the plaintiff for a partition of the family property liable to partition, that the agreement having been come to under a mutual mistake, it was no bar to the plaintiff maintaining the suit, for it would not have prejudiced the right of the plaintiff's father if he had chosen to insist upon a partition. SOOBRAMANIA TELAVER v. SOKKA TELAVER 5 Mad. 437

20. ——— Agreement to accept portion of property for maintenance—Suit for full share of property on partition. In a suit to recover a share of family property, the Civil Judge found that the plaintiff in 1856 waived his right to a share of the family property by accepting a small portion, and dismissed the suit. The plaintiff shared with other members of the family the belief that by established family usage the property was impartible and passed at each succession to the eldest of the co-heirs according to the ordinary law, the other co-heirs being entitled only to a portion for maintenance. Under that belief the plaintiff accepted the allotment made to him in 1856 by the then eldest co-heir of a smaller portion of the property than he would be entitled to on a partition as a sufficient provision for his maintenance. The plaintiff's younger brother instituted a suit in 1861, and succeeded in resisting the alleged custom, and obtained a decree for his full share. Held (reversing the decision of the Civil Judge), that the plaintiff was entitled to the relief asked for, it not appearing from the arrangement of 1856 that the parties intended the allotment to be in satisfaction and discharge of every right of the plaintiff as a co-parcener. 25. ——— Withdrawal of objection to sale in execution of decree—Effect of, on subsequent right to sue to set it aside. The plaintiff purchased certain property from the first and second defendants. The property was subsequently put up for sale by order of the Civil Court in execution of a decree against the first and second defendants, and was purchased by the third defendant. When the property was about to be sold under the decree, the plaintiff presented to the Court a petition objecting to the sale, but his vakil withdrew the petition with his consent before the sale. In a suit by the plaintiff for the recovery of the land:—Held, that the plantiff was not precluded from recovering the land by reason of his having withdrawn the petition, as he could not thereby be considered to have waived his right to sue. 27. ——— Agent's right to execute decree obtained by him as agent—Civil Procedure Code, 1882, s. 37—Recognized agent—Execution of decree. P filed a suit in the second class Subordinate Judge's Court at Mahad. As P resided at Thana, outside the jurisdiction of the Court of Mahad, she authorized her agent, under a general power-of-attorney, to conduct the suit on her behalf. The agent carried on the litigation up to the final decree passed by the High Court on appeal in P's favour. The agent then sought to execute the decree. The Court of Mahad passed an order upon his darkhast granting only partial execution. Against this order the agent filed an appeal in the District Court at Thana. Then, for the first time, the judgment-debtors challenged the agent's right to represent P who was residing within the District Court's jurisdiction. This objection prevailed, and the appeal was dismissed. Held, that the agent could not be prevented from executing the decree which he had obtained as agent. No objection had been taken to the agent's right to represent P at any stage of the litigation prior to the final decree. That objection must, therefore, be deemed to have been virtually waived, and could not be raised after the defendants had had their chance of success in the litigation. 28. ——— Remission of part performance of contract—Sum accepted on account of interest. A hypothecation-bond provided for payment of interest on the principal sum at the rate of 9 per cent. and contained a further provision that, on default being made in payment of interest accruing due, interest should be paid from the date of the bond at the rate of 15 per cent. Default was made when the first and second payments of interest became due. After the second payment had become due, the creditor accepted payment on account of interest of a sum, a little more than the arrears calculated at 9 per cent. In a suit by the creditor:—Held, that the plaintiff had not waived any right under the bond by accepting the payment on account of interest. NANJAPPA v. NANJAPPA I. L. R. 12 Mad 161

29. ——— Decree payable by instalments—Execution of decree—Default—Limitation. A decree was made for payment of the decretal amount by monthly instalments running over a period of twelve years: and it was provided that on default the decree-holder might execute the decree as a whole for the balance then due. In 1883 a default was made, and in 1884 the decree-holder filed an application for execution in respect thereof, but did not proceed with it, and continued to receive the monthly instalments. In 1887 he made another application for execution which he relied on the same default. Held, that the default, if it was one, had been

30. ——— . Decree payable by instalments, and in default, execution for whole amount to issue—Default in payment of instalments—Waiver by plaintiff of right to execute decree—Receipt by plaintiff of overdue instalments. By a consent decree passed in a mortgage suit the defendant was ordered to pay to the plaintiff the sum of R1,800 by yearly instalments of R50 payable on 30th April in each year, and in case of default in payment of any instalment the plaintiff was to be at liberty to execute the decree by sale of the mortgaged property. The defendants failed to pay the first instalment, which fell due on the 30th April 1888, and the plaintiff applied for execution and obtained an order for the sale of the property. In order to prevent the sale, the defendants, on the 13th November 1888, paid R60 out of Court, and the application for execution thereupon was allowed to drop. The defendants subsequently made the following payments, viz., R15 on the 5th June 1889, R25 on the 12th June 1889, R15 on the 1st January 1890, and R50 in the Nazir's office on the 2nd June 1890, which was the day on which the Court opened after the summer vacation, which had begun on the 30th April 1890. On the 6th June 1890 the plaintiff again applied for execution of the decree, which was granted by the Subordinate Judge. On appeal the District Judge reversed the order, holding that the plaintiff by accepting the above payments had waived his right to execute the decree. On appeal to the High Court:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to execution. The acceptance of the payments did not prove a waiver. They were not accepted on account of the specific instalments in arrears, but on account of the whole decree; and even if they were taken as payments of overdue instalments, they could not by themselves prove a waiver. 32. ——— Instalment-bond—Waiver—Payment of part of an instalment and interest. Where the terms of a bond were that, if any instalment remained unpaid, then the whole amount was to become due :—Held, that part payment and acceptance of part of an overdue instalment would not amount to a waiver, for on payment of a part of an instalment, there would remain something due and there would still be a default. Similarly payment and receipt of interest would not amount to a waiver. Cheni Bash Shaha v. Kumud Mundul, I. L. R. 5 Calc. 97, and Mon Mohun Roy v. Durga Churn Gooee, I. L. II, Art. 75—Cause of action—Disability or inability. In an unregistered instalment-bond there was a stipulation that in the event of default in payment of two consecutive instalments the creditor would be entitled to recover the whole amount covered by the bond, which was payable in twelve instalments. The second instalment was due on the 12th June 1899. The plaintiff brought a suit on the 1st June 1908 for recovery of the instalments due on the bond, relinquishing the first two instalments. Held, that mere abstinence on the part of the plaintiff from bringing a suit for recovery of the whole amount due, on the failure of payment of the first two instalments, did not amount to waiver; and that limitation began to run from the 12th June 1899, when the cause of action arose. 34. ——— Waiver of right to object to sale—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 244, 291, 311—Execution-sale, brought about by fraud—Plea of waiver when to be given effect to and to what extent—Public policy—Circumstances from which waiver to be inferred—Knowledge of rights waived, necessity of proving—Burden of proof—Presumption. A waiver is an intentional relinquishment of a known right or such conduct as warrants an inference of the relinquishment of such right, and there can be no waiver unless the person against whom the waiver is claimed had full knowledge of his rights and of the facts which would enable him to take effectual action for the enforcement of such rights. The burden of proof of such knowledge is on the person who relies on the waiver and such knowledge must be made to appear. A presumption of waiver cannot be rested on a presumption that the right alleged to have been waived was known. When it appeared from the proceedings that a judgment-debtor only waived objections to an execution-sale on the ground of (i) non-issue of fresh sale proclamations when the sale was adjourned from time to time, and (ii) inadequacy of price as resulting therefrom :—Held, that this did not prevent him from attacking the sale on the ground (i) that the sale proclamation had never been issued and had been fraudulently suppressed at the decree-holder's instance, and (ii) that the price realised was inadequate by reason of the decree-holders fraud. Whether there has been a waiver or not of the rights of a judgment-debtor to object to a sale and to what extent they may have been waived must depend upon the circumstances of each individual case : and the question has to be decided not merely upon the language of the petitions preferred by the judgment-debtor, but with regard to the whole of the proceedings in the case and particularly with reference to the order made by the Court upon the petitions. The right of waiver is subject to the control of public policy which cannot be contravened by any conduct or agreement of the parties and an agreement which seeks to waive an illegality may be void on grounds of public policy or morality. Quære : Whether, if it were made out that the judgment-debtors had in fact waived all possible rights to object to the validity of the sale, a Court of justice would give effect to the plea of waiver when the sale was brought about by fraud upon the processes of the Court. 1. ——— Conditions enabling co-sharer on payment of revenue due to take over the share of a defaulter—Mortgage by conditional sale—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 58—Limitation—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), Sch. II, Art. 148. The wajib-ul-arz of a certain village provided that if any co-sharer was in default in payment of Government revenue, certain persons—co-sharers in the patti and in the village amongst them—might, on discharging the unpaid revenue due by the defaulter, take possession of his share, though without power to partition and without power to transfer or sell. Also that, if within twelve years the defaulter or his heir wished to take back the property he could get it in the month of Jeth on payment of the amount of default without interest and without being entitled to a rendition of accounts. The wajib-ul-arz went on to provide that after the term of twelve years the heirs of the defaulter should not get the property, but the person, who had paid up the arrears of revenue should be the owner. Held, that, notwithstanding the provision last mentioned, the position of the person who had obtained possession under the wajib-ul-arz by paying arrears of revenue due by a defaulter, was that of a mortgagee under a mortgage by conditional sale as defined in s. 53 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, and that the defaulter or his representative, in the absence of a suit for foreclosure, had a period of sixty years within which the arrears of revenue might be paid up and the property redeemed. R. 7 I. A. 63*; I. L. R. 5 Calc. 744, and Uman Parshad v. Gandharp Singh, L. R. 14 I. A., 127; I. L. R. 5 Calc. 20, referred to. A recital in a wajib-ul-arz may operate as a will (see Mathura Das v. Bhikhan Mal, I. L. R. 19 All. 16). The weight to be given to a statement of that nature must depend in each case on the circumstances, in which it was originally made, and the corroboration it receives from extrinsic evidence. A village proprietor in 1877 caused the following declaration to be made in the wajib-ul-arz of the village recorded under Act XIX of 1873—"I am the only zamindar in this village. I am a Marwari Brahman. Seven years ago I adopted my sister's son, Murli. He is my heir and successor (Malik). If after this agreement, a son is born to me half the property would be received by him and half by the adopted son. If more than one son are born to me the property would be equally divided among them, including the adopted son, as brothers. I have two wives now: they will receive their maintenance from him (Murli)." The declarant died in 1885 leaving a natural-born son, who died childless in 1887. In 1896 the respondent (the "adopted son," mentioned in the declaration) brought a suit claiming to be entitled to the property therein mentioned on the strength of his adoption and also on the terms of the declaration, which he contended was a will. Under a ruling of the Privy Council in 1899, the adoption of a sister's son was held to be invalid; and both Courts in India found that a family custom, which would have validated such an adoption, was not established in this suit. The High Court held that the respondent was entitled to succeed irrespective of the adoption. Held, by the Judicial Committee assuming that the wajib-

ul-arz might be treated as a will, that the words "adopted son" in the declaration were descriptive only, and not the "reason and motive of the gift." The intention was to give him the property as an adopted son capable of inheriting by virtue of the adoption, and as his adoption was invalid by Hindu law, and not warranted by family custom, it gave him no right to inherit and the gift did not take effect. Fanindra Deb Raikat v. Rajeswar Das, *L. 2. ———— Statement in a will that the testator had at a former time given away or set apart property to charity—Not a testamentary devise—Absence of actual delivery—Reasonably clear intention. A mental act although afterwards sufficiently expressed in conduct will not, unless clothed in appropriate words, create a wakf. Per CURIAM.—We do not think that a mere statement in a will of some gift in the past can be referred back to the date, still undetermined, when that gift is afterwards alleged to have been made, or that such a narrative statement can in any view be an adequate substitute for the oral declaration of dedication to God, which the Mahomedan law appears to us imperatively to require, synchronously with the act of dedication itself. There is a plain distinction between giving in charity and declaring that one has given in charity. And for the purpose of fixing the origin of the wakf, if there was a wakf at all, the mere statement in a will that at some past date the testator has set apart such and such funds for charitable objects is of comparatively slight value. Where there has been no actual delivery, a reasonably clear declaration is necessary to create a wakf. BANUBI v. NARSINGRAO (1906)

4. ——— Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882), s. 96—Issue of search-warrant in the absence of any inquiry, trial, or other proceeding pending before Magistrate. Some treasure belonging to the Native State of Radhanpur was missing. The Administrator of Radhanpur sent a telegram to the District Superintendent of Police at Ahmedabad, stating that part of the missing treasure was in the possession of the accused who was a resident of Ahmedabad, and asking that this house should be searched. In consequence of his telegram, the City Police Inspector applied for a search-warrant to the City Magistrate of Ahmedabad. Thereupon the Magistrate issued a search-warrant under s. 96 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. In execution of this warrant, the house of the accused was searched and the police seized and took away certain property belonging to the accused, to his wife, and to his servant. The accused was subsequently arrested under a warrant issued by the Political Superintendent of Palanpur under s. 11 of the Extradition Act (XXI of 1879), but he was admitted to bail by the District Magistrate of Ahmedabad. On the 12th June 1897 the District Magistrate passed an order refusing to deliver up the property seized by the Police to the Political Superintendent of Palanpur, but allowing the police to retain the property for some time, as it was possible that a prosecution would be instituted in British India in respect of the stolen treasure. The Magistrate directed that, if no prosecution were instituted within two months, the property should be restored to the persons from whose possession it was taken. The District Magistrate subsequently reversed this order as being erroneous, and passed a fresh order on the 3rd August 1897, directing the property to be delivered up to the Political Superintendent of Palanpur. Held, that the City Magistrate had no authority to issue a search-warrant under s. 96 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, as at the time of issuing the search-warrant there was no investigation, inquiry, trial, or other proceeding under the Code pending before the Magistrate, for the purposes of which the production of the articles seized was necessary or desirable. Held, also, that the search-warrant being illegal and ultra vires, the subsequent orders relating to the detention and delivery of the property seized were also illegal and unjustifiable. In re HARILAL BUCH I. 2. ——— Informality of warrant—Application for discharge—Civil Procedure Code, 1859, s. 273—Delay in bringing up prisoner. B M and several other prisoners in the custody of the Sheriff of Calcutta for debt, without having been brought up to have an order for their allowance made, on being produced for that purpose by the Sheriff, applied for their discharge under s. 273 of Act VIII of 1859. Preliminary objections were taken to the validity of the warrants on which the Sheriff arrested them, on the grounds that the time for execution was not specified in them ; and that, even had they been orginally valid, their authority had expired, owing to the delay in bringing up the prisoners. Both objections were overruled. Held, that a mere informality in a warrant, such as the omission of the time for execution, only renders it irregular, and does not invalidate it ; that advantage having been taken of such irregularity to prejudice the prisoner, affords grounds for an application to the Court to set the warrant aside ; and that a mere delay in bringing the prisoner before the Court after his arrest, if not for a considerable period, does not render his detention illegal. In re BHOLANAUTH MULLICK . 5. ——— Warrant directed to Nazir —Arrest of judgment-debtor—Indorsement to peon —Civil Procedure Code, 1882, s. 343—Indorsement of particulars of arrest by Naib Nazir. Where a warrant issued by a Subordinate Court, directing the Nazir to arrest a judgment-debtor in execution of a decree, was entrusted by the Nazir to a subordinate for execution by indorsing his name upon it:—Held, that there is nothing in the Civil Procedure Code to prohibit a Nazir from authorizing a deputy to execute a warrant of arrest for him, and that his indorsement must be regarded as primâ facie evidence of the authority of the person to whom the warrant is delivered to execute it. Held, also, that it is most desirable, when the Nazirs of the Subordinate Courts delegate the duty of executing warrants of arrest, that they should confer the authority in more clear and explicit terms than are expressed by a mere indorsement, and that they should be careful in selecting proper persons to discharge that duty, bearing in mind, as far as circumstances permit, the position and caste of the party to be arrested, so as to avoid, through the medium of Court process, subjecting any such party to personal indignity or offence. Held, further, that it is important that the person chosen should be made acquainted with the contents of the warrant in order that he may be able to inform the judgment-debtor at whose suit and for what amount he is being taken into custody. Where a warrant for the arrest of the judgment-debtor had been executed, and an indorsement thereon, professedly under s. 343 of the Civil Procedure Code, was irregularly made by the Naib Nazir, he not having been "the officer entrusted with the execution of the warrant:"—Held, that such irregularity did not invalidate the arrest. 6. ——— Irregularity in warrant— Warrant of arrest in execution of a decree only initialled by proper officer—Civil Procedure Code, 1882, ss. 2 and 251. A warrant issued for the arrest of a debtor under the provisions of s. 251 of the Civil Procedure Code was initialled by the Munsarim of the Court, sealed with the seal of the Court, and delivered to the proper officer for execution. The debtor forcibly resisted the officer, and was tried and convicted, under s. 353 of the Penal Code, of assaulting a public servant in the execution of his duty as such. In revision, it was contended, with reference to the requirements of s. 251 of the Civil Procedure Code, that the warrant of arrest, having been initialled only, was bad, and the officer could not legally execute it, and consequently no offence under s. 353 of the Penal Code had been committed. Held, that this contention could not be allowed, and although it was proper that the person signing a warrant should write his name in full, it could not be said that because the signature was confined to the initials of the name, it was not the duty of the officer to execute the warrant. QUEEN-EMPRESS v. JANKI PRASAD

7. ———Validity of warrant— Liability of Nazir—Escape of judgment-debtor. The plaintiff sued out a warrant for the arrest of his judgment-debtor on the 4th December 1876. The warrant was lodged with the Nazir on the 16th December and was to be in force till the 4th January 1877. On the 22nd December 1876 the Nazir was informed that the judgment-debtor was already in the civil jail under a writ of execution issued by another creditor. The Nazir then returned the warrant to the Subordinate Judge who had issued it. On the 29th December the Subordinate Judge again sent it to the Nazir's office, where it was duly received by the Nazir's karkun (defendant No. 2). This fact was not reported by the karkun to the Nazir (defendant No. 1) until the 4th January 1877. On the 1st January 1877 the judgment-debtor's debt was paid by Government, and he was released in honour of Her Majesty's assumption of the title of Empress of India. The judgment-debtor thereupon left the district and could not be found, and the plaintiff's warrant remained unexecuted. The plaintiff sued the Nazir and his karkun for allowing his judgment-debtor to escape. Held, that the Nazir ought not to have sent the warrant back to the Subordinate Judge, and that there was no necessity for a fresh order on it until the time for which it had to run had expired. Held, also, that, according to Act VIII of 1859, as it stood at the end of 1876 and until October 1877, the batta for the maintenance of a debtor could not become payable until he was arrested and brought before the Court and the latter made the order for his committal to the civil jail. 8. ——— Warrant not exhausted if on one occasion the serving officer is unable to find the judgment-debtor— Execution of decree—Limitation—Civil Procedure Code, 1882, s. 230. The holders of a decree for money, dated the 2nd of December 1885, after various infructuous applications for execution, applied on the 4th of August 1897 for a warrant for the arrest of the judgment-debtor. That application was granted, but the peons sent to arrest the judgment-debtor reported that he had concealed himself, and the Court in consequence struck off the application for execution. On the 29th of November 1897 the decree-holders again applied for the arrest of the judgment-debtor, but that application also was struck off without the arrest having been made. Against the order striking off this latter application the decree-holders appealed to the High Court, where, on objection made that the decree could no-until he shall be lawfully discharged therefrom." Each warrant was signed by the Secretary to Government and was directed to the Commissioner of Police and to the Superintendent of the Jail. Held, that the warrants were not valid warrants for the following reasons: (i) they were irregular in that they contained an order to the person named in them to do a certain thing with a further conditional order for his imprisonment in the event of his not doing it. There ought to have been a separate order to each prisoner to remove himself from British India, which order should have been duly served upon him. Then, in case of his refusal or neglect to comply with its terms, there ought to have been a further order by the Governor in Council authorizing his arrest and detention in jail. (ii) The persons named in them were not indicated with sufficient certainty and particularity. The warrants contained no description of the persons against whom they purported to be directed, and did not give their place of residence. (iii) By reason of the direction contained in them that the persons named in them were to remove themselves from British India by sea to the places mentioned in the warrant. The particular route to be specified under s. 3 of Act III of 1864, is intended to be a route in British India, and not a route beyond the high seas. The High Court having held that, with reference to s. 222 of Act VIII of 1859, the first sale had been rightly set aside, an appeal to the Judicial Committee was dismissed with costs. A return was made on the 3rd March that no property of the debtor could be found. On the 30th March the same warrant was re-issued by the Nazir and made returnable on the following day. In execution of this warrant certain cattle belonging to the judgment-debtor were attached, and these were taken away by the debtor's men, who pushed one of the peons. The debtor's men were thereupon prosecuted for and convicted of offences under ss. 183 and 186 of the Penal Code. Held, that, after the return of the 3rd March was made, the warrant ceased to be a valid warrant, and it could not be re-issued in that form. Held, also, that, the warrant being illegal, no offence relating to the execution of such warrant was committed by the persons resisting such execution. ——— Sample—Jute—Examination—Proof of inferiority of quality——Opportunity of examining the bulk—Mode of examining sample. There may be cases in which the Court would be justified in drawing an inference as to the quality of the bulk from the quality of the sample, e.g., in a case in which the plaintiff had no opportunity of examining and testing the bulk ; but the Court would not condemn the bulk as of inferior quality on proof of the inferiority of a sample, if the plaintiff had the opportunity of examining the bulk but adduces no evidence to prove its quality. In examining a certain number of bales of goods taken as a sample, the entire quantity in each bale, and not merely a portion, should be examined. It is not proper to examine a portion merely of each such bale and to assume that the residue would be of quality similar to the portion examined, and this is particularly so when the examination of the sample is, by a trade custom, to be the test of the quality of the bulk. 1. ——— Infringement of water right whether contractual or proprietary, when likely to cause damages may be restrained by injunction though no evidence of actual damage is given. Ryotwari lands belonging to the plaintiff had been irrigated for a period of more than 60 years by a channel without any interference on the part of Government. The defendant without any justifying cause blocked up the mouth of the channel cutting off the entire supply of water. The plaintiff without claiming any damages, but stating in a general way that he had been damnified by the act of the defendants, sued to restrain the defendants by injunction from interfering with the channel. Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to the injunction sued for, whether his right to the water was based on a contract with Government or whether his right was a proprietary right appurtenant to his ownership of land. In either view of the case, the plaintiff is entitled to succeed without an express finding as to damage. It is enough if the act is such as to be likely to cause damage to the plaintiff and the stoppage of the entire supply of water is such an act. The interference with contractual relations without sufficient justification is a violation of legal right, which gives a right of action to the party, whose rights are infringed. The retention of water by a person on a portion of his land to prevent its passing on to other portions of his land is not an act done in the natural and usual course of enjoyment and the person so doing is liable for damage caused thereby. Mohonlal v. Baijivkore, *I. 3. ——— Madras Act VII of 1865—Extent right tax free water to be implied in Grants by Government—Voluntary payment, what amounts to. A grant by the Government of the right to collect the revenue of certain lands will, in the absence of a contract regarding water rights, carry with it, by implication, only an undertaking on the part of Government not to refuse to the ryots holding nunja lands, the quantity of water necessary to enable them to irrigate those lands and so to pay the revenue which they had paid to the Government before the grant. In 1826 the Government granted to A by a cowle the revenues of a village T., which was irrigated by a tank. The cowle specified the lands granted and no portion of the bed of the tank was included in the grant. The ryots of T. and those of other villages were drawing water from the tank by turns in shares proportioned to the extent of their acreage. The Government had on certain occasions levied the cost of repairing the tank in accordance with such shares. In a suit by the grantee of T. against Government to recover moneys collected from him as water-cess under Madras Act VII of 1865 :—Held, that the above arrangement regarding the distribution of water by turns and the action of Government in collecting the cost of repairs according to the shares in which the water was so drawn was merely evidence of a customary distribution of the water in the tank according to the areas served by it and was no evidence of the grant of any definite share of the water by Government. The ryots might demand that not less than the share should be sent down to their lands if required for the irrigation of those lands, but the Government was not bound to supply them with more than was required for the irrigation of the land irrigated at the time of the grant. Where the quit-rent on an inam is fixed on the income derived from the cultivation of a certain extent of land in a certain manner, the inamdar is entitled to use, free of water-rate, such quantity of water as may be required for the cultivation of such extent in the mode in which such income was calculated whether the water-rate is leviable as a tax or otherwise. The engagement between the Inam Commissioner and inamdar amounts to an engagement by which the Government undertake not to take more than a certain share of the income derived from the various sources taken into account in arriving at the amount of such income, as the consideration for relinquishing its reversionary right. The Inam Commissioner having power to sell the reversionary right of Government has the power to fix the price according to the rules framed by Government and any engagement by him in that respect, not in contravention of such rules, will be binding on Government. Where the income on which the quit-rent is calculated includes the income derivable from a second crop on a certain extent of wet land and from a single irrigated crop on a certain extent of dry land, no charge except the quit-rent, can be levied as water-cess or otherwise in respect of such extent for such cultivation. Payment made under threat of distress and sale, before the actual issue of the warrant of distress, will not be a voluntary payment if,

4. ——— Right of Government to divert and distribute by irrigation works—No action against Government without proof of damage—Paramount right of Government higher than that of riparian owners—Easement Act (V of 1882), s. 7 (2) (a) and s. 7, ill. (h)—Right of diversion for riparian and non-riparian purposes—Right of riparian owner to take out water put in by himself. The Government has power, by the customary law in India, to regulate in the public interests, in connection with the collection, retention and distribution of waters of rivers and streams flowing in natural channels, and of waters introduced into such rivers by means of works constructed at the public expense and in the public interests, for purposes of irrigation, provided they do not thereby inflict sensible injury on other riparian owners and diminish the supply they have hitherto utilised. In regard to works of irrigation constructed by Government in connection with a natural stream, a riparian owner has no higher right than that of not being damaged by any diminution in the supply of water he has been accustomed to receive. The onus of proving damage lies on the riparian owner. The maintenance of irrigation works is a duty cast upon Government and the rights and liabilities of Government in connection with irrigation works are not commensurate with those of private riparian proprietors. They are analogous to those of persons and corporations on whom statutory powers have been conferred and statutory duties imposed. *Ponnusawmi Tevar v. Collector of Madura, 5. Mad. H. C. This paramount right of Government is recognised by the Legislature in section 7(2) (a) of the Easement Act. It is independent of the ownership of the bed of the stream and exists alike whether the interest affected that of ryotwari tenants or of the holders of proprietary estates. The right of riparian owners, recognised by section 7, ill. (h) of the Easement Act to the flow water without interruption, is only a right to enjoy without such interruption as will cause material damage. As between riparian owners the law established in England is that diversion of water for riparian purposes is not actionable without proof of injury, but diversion for non-riparian purposes is actionable without proof of such injury. Kensit v. *Great Eastern Railway Company, 23 Ch. It is a sufficient acknowledgment by a testator of his signature to his will if he makes the attesting witnesses understand that the paper which they attest is his will, though they do not see him sign it, or observe any signature to the paper which they attest, provided that the Court is satisfied that the testator's signature was on the will when the witnesses attested it. precise, it cannot be strained for the purpose of giving effect to what possibly might have been the intention of the testator, but is not expressed or implied in the terms of the testament. G by a clause in his will, gave his wife a life-interest in the house in his possession, and in those which he might afterwards "purchase." to his son and daughter, and, after bequeathing some pecuniary legacies, devised certain immoveable property to the trustees in perpetuity in trust for the support of hospitals in the North-West Provinces, with directions that the surplus income (if any) from his personalty during the lives of his children, and on the death of either of them his or her annuity, and on the death of both of them the whole income of the personalty, should be applied in support of the hospitals. The will also contained a provision that the property should never be sold. In a suit for the construction, and for declaration of the trusts, of the will, it appeared that the income of the personalty was not more than sufficient, after payment of the legacies, to pay the annuities to the testator's children, and that the immoveable property was greatly in need of repairs and did not produce enough for the support of the hospitals, or to enable the trusts of the will relating thereto to be carried out. Held, that the devise for the support of the hospitals was a valid devise, and one to which the Court would give effect, as being a charitable trust within the scope of 43 Eliz., c. 4. The statutes of Mortmain not applying to India, the Court will carry out such a trust when the subject is immoveable property, just as it would if it had been personal property. Held, also, that, if the prohibition against sale were a valid one, the Court could not order a sale merely because it would be advantageous to the charity that the property should be sold, but held that the prohibition against sale was void as being repugnant to the devise, and, notwithstanding such prohibition, the trustees had power to sell, or otherwise alienate, the property for the purpose of maintaining the hospitals. Although there was a charity in Madras, called ''The Armenian Orphans' College,'' there was none in Calcutta or elsewhere answering the description of the Calcutta Armenian Orphans' College, but there were two, and only two, charitable, institutions in Calcutta which provided for the relief and enjoyment of the poor families, widows, orphans, and schools of the Armenian nation. Of these, one, the Church of St. Nazareth, distributed money amongst, and gave relief to, the poor families, widows, and orphans of the Armenian community; and the other, the Armenian Philanthropic Academy, educated gratuitously the poor and orphans of the same community. The note was invested by order of the Court, and there had been a large accumulation of interest thereon. The governors of the two institutions concurred in asking that each should receive a moiety of the accrued and future interest of the fund. Held, that the cy près doctrine applied; that the accumulated interest should remain invested; but that the accruing interest on the accumulated fund should be paid half-yearly, one moiety to the wardens of St. Nazareth's church, and the other to the managers of the Armenian Philanthropic Academy. 23. ——— Failure of object—Cy près performance—Construction of will. The doctrine of cy près as applied to charities rests on the view that charity in the abstract is the substance of the gift, and the particular disposition merely the mode, so that, in the eye of the Court, the gift, notwithstanding the particular disposition may not be capable of execution, subsists as a legacy which never fails and cannot lapse. It cannot be laid down as a general principle that the cy près doctrine is displaced where the residuary bequest is to a charity, or that among charities there is anything analogous to the benefit of survivorship, since cases may easily be supposed where the charitable object of the residuary clause is so limited in its scope, or requires so small an amount to satisfy it, that it would be absurd to allow a large fund bequeathed to a particular charity to fall into it. On the failure of a specific charitable bequest, jurisdiction arises to act on the cy près doctrine, whether the residue be given in charity or not unless upon the construction of the will a direction can be implied that the bequest if it fails, should go to the residue. In applying the cy près doctrine, regard may be had to the other objects of the testator's bounty, but primary consideration is to be given to the gift which has failed, and to a search for objects akin to it. The character of a charity as being for the relief of misery in a particular locality may guide the Court in framing a cy près scheme to benefit that locality. Unless the cy près scheme framed by the lower Court be plainly wrong, a Court of Appeal should not interfere with it. MAYOR OF LYONS v. ADVOCATE GENERAL OF BENGAL.

24. ——— Charitable gift—Cy près doctrine—Lapse—Construction of will. A testator directed his executor to set apart a sum of R7,000 to provide a fund for or towards the education of two or more boys at St. Paul's School, Calcutta, such boys to be natives of Calcutta, of poor and indigent parents, or fatherless children of Armenian or other Christian religion. The testator died in 1867. In 1864 the St. Paul's School, Calcutta, was removed to Darjeeling. In the St. Paul's School, Calcutta, the fees for day scholars and day boarders were R8 and R10 respectively. In the St. Paul's School, Darjeeling, there were no day scholars nor any day boarders, and the cost of a regular boarder would be about R400 per annum Held, that the gift did not lapse, being a general charitable bequest, and that under the circumstances it must be executed cy près. 25. ——— Gift—Cy près, doctrine of—Lapse of legacy—Costs. Under the will of A, who appointed the Administrator-General of Bengal his executor, B had a life-interest in the residue of the testator's estate. B brought a suit against the Administrator-General to have it declared that a pecuniary legacy, given under the will, had lapsed and fallen into the residue. Prior to the hearing it was agreed between B and the Administrator-General that the costs of the suit should come out of the testator's estate; this agreement was embodied in a consent order obtained on the application of the plaintiff. The suit was dismissed, and this decision was affirmed on appeal. On the question of costs:—Held, that the estate of the testator not being before the Court, the agreement as to costs could not be carried out, and that the plaintiff must pay the costs of all parties to the suit. He further directed that the said share should not be sold or mortgaged. Evidence was given, which showed that the above-mentioned religious ceremonies were performed among Parsis rather with a view to the private advantage of individuals than for the public benefit. Held, that the trusts of the will were void, and that the direction that the property should not be sold was invalid. Interest at 6 per cent. to be paid to her every year. If in her lifetime she demands the money to use in a good work (sárá kám), it should be given to her, but if she has not taken it in her lifetime, Jamnadas and Bhagubhai are to dispose of it according to their own pleasure after death." Held, that this was not a bequest in favour of good works (sárá kám), but a bequest to the testator's wife, with a direction to use it in good works (sárá kám), and as that direction was void for uncertainty, she was entitled to the money as if the will had contained no such direction. 29. ——— Children—Domicile—Rules for interpretation—Accretions to property from rents. Where a testator has an ascertained domicile, the construction of his will must depend on the law of that domicile; but if no particular law is applicable, the will is to be interpreted by principles of natural justice. In such cases, in applying the rules of Hindu, Mahomedan, or English law to the wills of Hindus, Mahomedans, or East Indian Christians respectively, their particular habits and modes of life may be looked to as a guide to the interpretation. From the context of the will and surrounding circumstances, "children" may be interpreted as illegitimate children. Where by the will the income of estates was left to devisees for life, with a gift over of the corpus on their death, and a portion of the income, instead of being divided among the tenants-for-life, was applied to the purchase of other estates:—Held, that those estates did not pass to the remainder men, but formed the absolute property of the tenants-for-life, and passed to their devisees. 30. ——— Contingent gift—Puttro poutradi, meaning of—Absolute estate. A Hindu, B L M, died in 1874, leaving a widow, K K D, a daughter's daughter, H D D, and a brother, R L M, with whom he was on bad terms. By his will, which was made on the 9th of August 1870, and at a time when there was no reason to abandon all expectation of his leaving male issue of his own, B L M, directed that, in the event of his dying without leaving a son, grandson, or son's grandson, his widow, K K D, should take the whole of his estate according to the shastras, and enjoy the profits thereof for her life, and that on her death, in the event of a daughter or daughters having been born to him, then she or they, and on the death of her or them, then her or their son or sons (the testator's daughter's sons) should in like manner take and become the owner or owners of the estate according to the shastras, and that in the event of there being no daughter or daughter's son of the testator living at the time of the death of his widow, then his granddaughter (daughter's daughter), H D D, should take the whole estate absolutely from generation to generation (puttro poutradi); and that in the event of no son or daughter being born to the testator after the execution of his will, and of his granddaughter (daughter's daughter), H D D, dying childless, or being a barren or childless widow, or otherwise disqualified, then the whole of his property should go to the Government, to be employed by it for charitable and philanthropic purposes. The main object of the testator B L M, in making these dispositions of his property was admittedly to exclude R L M, from the inheritance. Held, that H D D, if she survived the testator's widow K K D, and was not then a barren or childless widow or otherwise disqualified, would take, not a life-interest, but an absolute estate, to the exclusion of R L M. Held, also, that the words "puttro poutradi" has generally the effect of defining the estate given as an estate of inheritance, and did not by themselves necessarily denote that the estate given was to be one descendible to heirs male only. Held, also, that in case of H D D not surviving K K D, or of her being at the time of the death of K K D for any reason disqualified from taking the estate, then upon the death of K K D the gift to the Government of the reversion to the exclusion of R L M, would take effect, and was a good and valid gift. 31. ——— Gift to children on thier attaining 21. Where words of contingency form part of the description of the class of persons to take, as in the case of a gift to those "who shall attain the age of 21," the words must receive their natural construction, and no estate vests in any one till he attains the prescribed age. In such a case there must be something in the context pointing to a different construction, or something in the will inconsistent with the literal construction, to justify a Court in adopting any but the literal construction. In the case of words of contingency occurring in the description of the class of persons to take a mere gift over is not sufficient to change their meaning. BALLIN v. BALLIN . I. L. out of the income thereof, having let them out to hire, and after paying taxes and ground-rent divide the proceeds every three months between the testatrix's two sons, that the executors should not give the rents to the creditor, because the bequest of the income to the sons was "not an entire gift to them, but a mere provision for their support." The will proceeded as follows : " Should my son M happen to die before the decease of his wife, then I give the share of M to his widow H M, etc., and after the death of H M, should my son M not have left any legitimate male child, then I give the above share to my son, J, etc. After the death of M (and his wife), should he have left legitimate male children, such male children shall in the same manner receive the income once in every three months till they attain the age of 21 years, and then the amount of their share shall be divided into equal portions, and each of them having become the owner of his portion shall receive the same from my executors, but if H M die before M, and M die without having had legitimate male children then I give and bequeath the shares of my son M to my son J as a provision for his support, etc. If my sons M and J die without having male issue, and if their wives, that is to say, H M and C J, die without having male issue begotten by my sons, then I give my garden, etc., actually and entirely to the sons and daughter of my daughter G, begotten by her first husband, G A, that is, to A M B and N or in case of their death to their sons and daughters, lawfully begotten, or to such of them as shall survive at the time. My said garden shall be divided into equal shares, and each of them having received his share in equal proportion as a legacy from me, shall enjoy the same." M and H M, his wife, died without having left any children ; J died in the lifetime of M A, and one of the sons of G, died without leaving children in the lifetime of H M. Held, first, that the direction to the executors to lease the property indefinitely and out of the income to make repairs, pay taxes and ground-rent, and apply the rent to the maintenance of the sons, was sufficient to vest the legal estate in the trustees. Secondly, that such estate was an estate in fee. Thirdly, that the children of G took equitable estates in remainder in fee, defeasible in case of their death in the lifetime of the first taker for life, in which event there was substituted a devise to their children in fee. Fourthly, that the children of G took as tenants-in-common, and not as joint-tenants, and therefore, that, as there was nothing from which cross remainders between the children of G could be implied, the share of A reverted to the heir-at-law of the testatrix. Fifthly, that wherever any estate in fee is devised to a trustee in trust without any limitation of the estate of the cestui que trust, the latter takes the beneficial estate in fee. 34. ——————— Gift to children. A testator, after providing for payment of debt, etc., directed that the whole of his property should be disposed of and the proceeds placed in the Oriental Bank with power to the executors to invest the same in mortgages, and to leave existing mortgages untouched. The will then contained this direction: "That a monthly stipend of R15 be paid to my daughter E S for her own benefit, and R20, for the benefit of her two children (during their minority), and in the event of the demise of any of the said children occurring, the sum of R10 to cease rateably as being the allowance for each child; that on each of the children attaining their age of majority, I request that my executors pay to each of them severally and proportionably the full amount of interest accruing from my estate (the existing provision for my two daughters to continue during their natural life), and after their demise the said interest in like manner to revert to their heir or heirs in succession." Held, first, that a direction to pay a monthly stipend to E S and M D respectively was simply a charge upon the testator's estate to pay the said stipends to E S and M D for their respective lives. Secondly, that E S and M D were severally entitled during the lifetime and minority of their children to a monthly stipend of R10 in respect of each child, such payment to cease upon the death of each child or on its attaining majority, till which latter event the said children took no interest under the will. Thirdly, each child upon attaining its majority took a share of the residue, proportioned to the number of children then living, and a contingent proportionate interest in the shares of each of the other children which would become vested on the death of each one dying under twenty. Fourthly, the limitation of the gift, "during their natural life and after their demise, the said interest in like manner to revert to their heir or heirs in succession," did not prevent the children from taking their several shares absolutely under the will. Semble: The rule in Wild's Case, 6 Rep. 17, is not applicable to personality. If, on the other hand, she is delivered of a female child, all the expenses of her marriage or maintenance till that period should be defrayed from my estate. I also wish that she should receive a legacy of a Government 4 per cent. promissory note for R2,000 on her attaining proper age. In case my son dies before attaining proper age, all my estate and property should be taken possession of by my brother. My wife is to receive a Government 4 per cent. promissory note for R1,000 as a legacy, and is to be maintained from my estate if she continues to live in our family dwelling-house under my brother's protection." The child with which the widow was enciente turned out to be a daughter. Held, that the clause in italics was one purporting to give the property, and not only the management of it to N, the power of management having already been given him in appointing him executor; that the provisions for maintenance of the widow, and for the marriage expenses of the daughter, tended to show (putting aside the legacies) that the widow and daughter were not to take the larger estate which they would have successively taken as heiresses, and that the wife of the testator having borne to him a son, and the apparent intention of the testator having been to give the estate to N, if the son did not take, or if the estate to the son failed by reason of his not attaining proper age, the gift over to N, on the principle laid down in Jones v. *Westcomb, 1 Eq. 39. ——— Perpetuities, Rule against—Superstitious uses—Trust for masses—Executor—Assent of—Vesting of bequest. An Armenian died in Madras in 1836, leaving a will whereby she appointed executors and bequeathed a certain sum "that the income thereof be given for perpetual masses for the benefit of my soul and for the souls in purgatory," and she also bequeathed, inter alia, R42,000 to her granddaughter, for life, and provided that in the event of her marrying and having children she could bequeath to them the said R42,000, but in the event of her dying without issue, R14,000 out of the said R42,000 should be subtracted and given to her husband, and the remaining R28,000 should be added to the first-mentioned bequest, and the income thereof be similarly given for masses. The executor with probate gave effect to the first-mentioned legacy. By a settlement made in contemplation of the marriage of the granddaughter, the subject of the second legacy was settled as provided in the will except as to the R14,000, as to which it was declared that in the event of there being no issue of the marriage, and of the wife surviving the husband and dying without marrying again, it should be divided between the residuary legatees of the testatrix. The husband was a party to the settlement, as also was the executor of the testatrix who was one of the trustees of the settlement. The marriage having taken place, a suit was brought by the husband and wife against the trustees, and a decree was passed under which the trustees were relieved of their office, and the trust funds paid into Court with the direction that interest accruing thereon be paid to the wife until further order. The husband died without issue, and subsequently in 1890 the wife died, not having re-married. The Administrator-General of Madras took out letters of administration to administer the estate left unadministered of the testatrix, and the R42,000 above referred to were paid over to him. Held, by SHEPHARD, J., that the sum of R14,000 by reason of the settlement, but not otherwise, fell into the residue of the estate of the testatrix. Held by COLLINS, *C. The testator bequeathed "to my grandchildren by my said late daughter E W, also to my grandson F W M and to his step-brother G W M" in equal shares a certain fund. Held, that this was a bequest to the testator's grandchildren by his late daughter E W not as a class, but to them invidually as personæ designatæ. Held, also, that, under the terms of the will, the testator's said grandchildren by the late E W and F W M and G W M took vested interests in their respective shares in the said fund from the death of the testator; that the gift to them of "the benefit, interest and profit" of the fund was a gift of the corpus of the fund by virtue of s. 159 of the Indian Succession Act; that they took as tenants-in-common, not as joint tenants; and that under a power given to the executor to make disbursements from the said fund for certain purposes for the benefit of F W M in connection with his going to and returning from England the executor was not authorized to apply, towards those purposes, more than F W M's one-ninth share in the said fund, as it was not the intention of the testator to give F W M a benefit out of that fund over and above that share, and that the executor, in making disbursements for the purposes specified, was only empowered to trench upon the principal of that share if the income, as applied under the power of disbursement for F W M's support and maintenance in England, were not sufficient. Held, also, that under the terms of the devise in the third and fourth clauses of the will of a certain house and

Premises to F W M, the devisee took on the testator's death a vested interest in that property, liable to be divested in the event of his dying under the age of twenty-one years. Held, also, that under the terms of the devise in the fifth and sixth clauses of the will of a certain house and premises and furniture to the children of the testator's late daughter E W (who was dead at the date of the will), there was an absolute gift to the children of E W of the testator's whole interest in that property, and that such gift was not controlled by the directions in the latter part of the fifth clause that the house should not be sold until the youngest grandchild attained the age of eighteen years, which must be regarded merely as an expression of the wish of the testator and not as a precatory trust, and was of no legal effect; and that the children of E W who were living at the testator's death did not take as joint tenants, but took as personæ designatæ, each an equal share in the property, which vested in them on the death of the testator, and therefore the share of one of them, E G W, who had survived the testator, but died subsequently, having vested in E G W, passed to E G W's representative, the ninth defendant. In the sixteenth clause of the will the testator directed his executor and trustee out of a certain sum of R500 to "disburse various petty pensions to some poor people who have been mentioned to him" (the executor and trustee) "by me." Held, that there was a deficiency on the face of the will as to the objects of this bequest, and by s. 68 of the Indian Succession Act no extrinsic evidence could be admitted as to the intention of the testator, and that this legacy therefore failed and fell into the undisposed of residue. Held, also, that the bequest in the seventeenth clause of the will of R10,000 to the support of the testator's Temperance and Reading Rooms for European pensioners and the Poor Widows' Quarters attached thereto, being a bequest to charitable uses, was void under s. 105 of the Indian Succession Act, as the testator had nearer relatives than nephews, and the will was executed less than twelve months before his death. of his children in equal shares when of the age allowed by law. And in the event of his said wife contracting a second marriage, and his children dying before marriage, and without children and under age, his wife should take half of his estate and the testator's brother the other half, and in the event of the brother dying without children the testator's wife should take the whole estate. The testator's wife remained his widow until her death, her children having all predeceased her without being married. Held, that the intention of the testator by the first devise was to give an absolute estate to his wife and children jointly, and that the remaining clauses of the will were merely intended to restrict the mode in which they were to enjoy the gift. The plaintiff, a widowed daughter-in-law of the testator, and a minor, was removed from his house by her maternal relations and brother with the aid of the police, and resided for more than three months with her mother. Held, that under the circumstances the plaintiff's absence did not work a forfeiture. Clavering v. Ellison, *7 H. 45. ——— Restriction on legatees—Enjoyment—Residuary estate. Where a testator leaves a legacy absolutely as regards his estate, but restricts the mode of the legatees' enjoyment to secure certain objects for the benefit of the legatee, and where such objects fail, the absolute gift prevails, and does not fall into the residue of the testator's estate. Therefore, where a testator gave legacies to certain of his grandsons and granddaughters but nevertheless declared that such legacies should be held upon trust (as to the legacies to the grandsons) to invest the same and to apply the income during the minority of the legatee towards his maintenance and education, and upon his attaining the age of 21 years to pay him the income during his lifetime, and after his death to pay such income unto the widow of such grandson, and after the death of both of them to transfer the capital unto the child or children of such grandson, as being a son or sons should attain the age of 21 years, or being a daughter should attain that age or marry, in equal shares as tenants-in-common; and where the testator especially provided as to the legacy left to one grandson that upon the happening of certain events it should be paid to his other garndchildren:—Held, that the gift to the grandsons were absolute, and that the subsequent provisions were simply a qualification of the gifts for the benefit of the legatees; and that therefore upon the death of one of the grandsons unmarried, his legal representative was entitled to the legacy left to him. the annual proceeds of such investments, so far as the same would extend, to pay certain annuities and postponed legacies as they became due, and to pay such surplus income as might from time to time exist to the person entitled to the beneficial enjoyment of the real property or the surplus rents or profits thereof, with an ultimate trust, after all the legacies and annuities had been satisfied, for the person or persons entitled to the beneficial enjoyment of the real property. And as to the reality upon trust until all the debt and legacies had been paid, and all the annuities had fallen in, to receive the rents, and thereout in the first instance to pay the unsatisfied legacies and annuities, and to pay the surplus rents to the person or persons for the time being to whom the real estate (subject to the devise to the trustees) was given by the will. And as a first charge on the net income of the real property (after satisfying the expenses of establishments), the testator directed the trustees to pay R30,000 per annum to the person for the time being entitled to the beneficial enjoyment of the real property or the surplus income thereof. He further directed them, after all the annuities and legacies had fallen in and been satisfied, to convey the real estate, so far as the then condition of circumstances would permit, unto and to the use of the person entitled, under the limitations contained in the will, to the beneficial interest therein. The first limitation was to J M T for life. At the end of the limitations of the real estate, the will contained the following proviso: "Provided always, and I hereby declare if any devisee, or tenant-for-life . . . . . shall permit or suffer the said property so devised and limited as aforesaid, or any portion thereof, to be sold for arrears of Government revenue, or shall, after attaining his majority, cease to keep up in a due state of repair, and to use as his residence in Calcutta, the said baithakhana house and premises where I now reside, and make use of and enjoy my library, horses, carriages, farmyard, furniture in the said house, and jewels, gold and silver plates, etc., in my use or possession, then, and immediately thereupon, the devise and limitations in this my will contained and declared shall wholly cease and determine as to him, and the person next in succession to him under the limitations aforesaid shall at once succeed," as if the person committing a breach of such conditions had then died. The testator died in August 1868. In December 1868 his son G M T instituted a suit for the purpose of avoiding and setting aside the trusts and limitations of the will, except so far as they were for payment of debts, legacies, and annuities. This suit was dismissed on the 1st of April 1869. G M T appealed, and on the 1st September 1869 the Appeal Court declared him to be absolutely entitled to the personality, subject to the trusts for payment of debts, legacies and annuities, and entitled, on the death of the defendant J M T, the tenant-for-life, to the reality. J M T and others, claiming under the limitations in the will, appealed to the Privy Council; and G M T filed a cross-appeal in which he claimed that the gift of the life-estate to J M T ought to be declared void. By the order of Her Majesty in Council, which was dated the 9th August 1872, and which arrived in Calcutta in September 1872, all the limitations after the limitation to J M T were declared void and inoperative, and it was further declared that J M T was beneficially entitled to a life-interest in the reality, and also in the personality directed to be conveyed or converted into a fund, subject to the payments on the will directed to be made, and to the provisions in the will not thereby declared to be void; and also until the legacies and annuities fell in and were satisfied, to R2,500 a month out of the net rents of the reality, and also to the surplus rents of the same and the surplus interest of the personality; and that, upon the failure or determination of J M T's life-interest, G M T was entitled as heir-at-law to the real and personal property. The proviso for cessor was not among the provisions of the will which were declared void. J M T was one of the trustees under the will. After the testator's death, the business of the estate continued, as theretofore, to be carried on in a portion of the baithakhana house; and J M T, who had a family dwelling-house of his own, used, up to November 1869, to attend at the baithakhana daily for the transaction of business. In November 1869 J M T quarrelled with his co-trustees, and ceased to go to the baithakhana. In April 1870 he demanded from the other trustees that possession of the baithakhana should be given to him and upon their insisting on the right to occupy the portion of the baitkakhana used for the purpose of the estate business, sued them for possession. In July 1870 a decree for possession was made in his favour. The trustees appealed, and ultimately, in July 1871, the Appellate Court made a declaration that it was consistent with the trusts of the will that J M T should enter into possession; and the trustees were ordered to deliver to him possession of the baithakhana, except the portion of the ground floor occupied for the business of the estate. After obtaining his decree, J M T found that the baithakhana was in a very bad state of repair and called upon the trustees to have proper repairs executed. On their refusal to do so, except under direction of the Court, J M T, in December 1871, brought a suit to compel them to effect necessary repairs; the trustees contested the suit, but in March 1872 a decree was passed directing them to make their repairs. Subsequently repairs were begun which were completed in October 1872. In a suit by G M T, alleging that J M T had committed a breach of one or more of the conditions contained in the proviso for cesser, by not residing in the baithakhana house and by neglecting to keep it in repair, and had thereby incurred a forfeiture of which the plaintiff was entitled to take advantage:—Held, that the clause containing the provisions for cessor and shifting of the estate was intended to come into operation as a whole and not piecemeal, and therefore that, until J M T came into full beneficial enjoyment of the life-estate given him by the will, or at all events until he became entitled to the surplus rents, the time had not arrived when that clause was intended to apply. Held, further, that, assuming that such time had arrived, the action of the plaintiff, in contesting the right of J M T, under the will, to occupy the baithakhana house and premises, debarred him from claiming that effect should be given to the clause of forfeiture for non-residence. Even apart from any action by the plaintiff, the conduct of the trustees in disputing the right of J M T to possession of a portion of the baithakhana house, and refusing to repair, would suspend the operation of the forfeiture clause until October 1872, inasmuch as it prevented him until that time from obtaining such a possession as was contemplated by the forfeiture clause. The forfeiture clause was not brought into operation by the judgment and order of the Judicial Committee of 9th August 1872. Held, on the evidence, that J M T had complied with the conditions as to residence. GANENDRO MOHUN TAGORE v. JUTTENDRO MOHUN TAGORE . . . . 12 B. L. R. 1

On appeal to the Privy Council :—Held, that, as the clause provided for the cesser and determination of the life-interest of J M T in the event of the conditions in it not being performed, his interest, notwithstanding the conditions over had been declared to be void, would cease when that event happened. Held, that the clause could not be constructed so as virtually to defeat it, and therefore it must be held to be operative before the trusts of the will were at an end, and J M T's state perfected by a conveyance. But held on the evidence that there had been no breach of the condition contained in the clause. The delay in not residing before October 1872, was not unreasonable. Where, in a condition of residence, no manner or period of residence is prescribed, but residence simply, and without definition exclusive residence is not supposed to be meant ; in such cases the occasional use of a house and keeping an establishment in it with the intention of again using it as a residence is a sufficient compliance with the condition. above proportion to the survivors. Fourth in the event of issue, they may bequeath their share to any one of their children they may select, subject to the above conditions." C married in 1874, and, by a settlement made in consideration of the marriage, her share was assumed to be assigned to trustees upon certain trusts. In 1875 C and her husband made the following joint will : " We do hereby constitute the survivor of us to be executor or executrix in our estate and sole heir of the same, together with the child or children begotten in our marriage." She died shortly after the execution of the above will, leaving one child. In a suit by C's husband and the trustees of the settlement of 1874 for the administration of the testator's estate and for the construction of his will :—Held, that the settlement of 1874 could not operate upon C's share in consequence of the direction of the testator, that it should not be transferred in the lifetime of C, and that the plaintiffs took nothing under the settlement. Held, also, that the power of appointment given by the will of the testator had not been properly exercised by the joint will, and that the child of C took the whole of her mother's share. 48. ——— Gift of income for life with power to appoint—Invalid power of appointment—Gift over in default of appointment—Gift of residue equally between two sons and then to next-of-kin. A Parsi by his will devised a certain house to his executors on trust after payment of repairs, etc., out of the income thereof to pay the balance of such income to his daughters, C and J, in equal moieties, and after their death " to the use of such of the issue only of the said C and J as they should respectively appoint, such appointment to affect their own respective moiety only and not that of the other of them," and in default of appointment on trust to sell the house and divide the proceeds as directed in the will. Held, that each daughter took half the house in question for her life with power to appoint it among her children as she thought fit. Even if the power to appoint had been invalid, the gift over on default should be upheld, on the authority of Peacock v. Frigout, [1893] 1 Ch. 54. A Parsi testator by his will bequeathed the residue of his moveable property to his executors in trust out of the income thereof to apply the sum of R50 for the maintenance of his son R until he should attain 21 years of age and to invest the surplus of such income in Government securities, which should be added to the original corpus of his moveable property for the benefit of his said son R, and upon his attaining the age of 21 to pay over to him " the whole of the interest, dividends, and produce only of the corpus of the whole of the moveable property," and after the death of R in trust to divide the said corpus of the moveable property with all its additions and accumulations among the next-of-kin of the said R. directed that the above bequest should extend and be applicable to his son N, and that the executors should divide the income of the moveable property between R and N instead of giving the whole to R. The Court was of opinion that, under the will and codicil, R and N were each to have a moiety of the income for their respective lives, and that on their death one moiety of the corpus was to go to their next-of-kin. The Court, however, declined to make a declaration to that effect, as R who at the date of suit was unmarried, might afterwards marry and have children who would not be bound by a declaration made in this suit. They are considered as my children. No one is to offer them any hindrance or impediment. I have presented all to my wife and to my daughter, M." Held, (i) (confirming FULTON, J.), that A and M took only a life-interest in the estate. 50. ——— Gift in remainder expectant on termination of estate for life—Devise of talukh—The Oudh Estates Act (I of 1869)—Registration—Acceleration of remainder on failure of life-estate. A gift in remainder expectant on the termination of an estate for life does not fail, but is accelerated by reason of gift of such prior life-estate not taking effect. The principle of the decision in Lainson v. Lainson, 5 De Gex M. & G., 754 : 18 Beav. 1, held applicable to a will made by a Hindu testator. A talukhdar, whose talukh was entered in the third of the six lists prepared in conformity with s. 8 of "The Oudh Estates Act," I of 1869, devised his estate by a will which was not registered to one of his wives for life, and after her death to his younger son by her. Held, as a consequence of the above rule, that it was not necessary to decide, upon a claim by the elder son as heir-at-law whether the widow, as a person "who would have succeeded to an interest" in the talukh, if the talukhdar had died intestate, would have been within the exception, in reference to the effect of non-registration of will contained in s. 13 of the same Act. his real and personal estate upon trust to sell the real estate either together or in parcels, and either by public auction or private contract, and to call in, sell, and convert into money such part of his personal estate as should not consist of money, and to divide the said moneys, and the ready money which might belong to such estate, amongst the several persons named in the schedule to the will, and to pay the same to them in the shares and proportions therein mentioned, as and when they should respectively attain the age of 21 years in the case of males, or, in the case of females, when they should respectively attain that age or marry. He directed that, in the event of any of such persons dying in his lifetime, or at any time thereafter "prior to the said division," leaving lawful issue, such issue should be entitled to the share which their deceased parent would have taken. One of the legatees who had attained the age of 21 years at the testator's death died five months after him, before payment of the legacy, and left lawful issue. Held, that the legacy vested in interest in the legatee at the testator's death, but that the legatee having died prior to the division of the estate, it became divested; that the "division" of the testator's estate meant, in this will, the ascertainment of the amounts allottable to the share of each legatee, after the conversion of the estate into money; and that the gift over in favour of the legatee's issue was not void for uncertainty, but took effect. Johnson v. Crook, *L. 54. ——— Bequest to orphan in Military Orphan Asylum—Direction to trustees. A special case was stated for the opinion of the Court as to whether S M took a vested interest in the sum of R6,325 under the following clause of will: "I paid to the M O Society R6,000 for S M, and invested R6,826 the interest on which I directed to be paid to the mother of S M. Now I directed my trustees after the death of the mother of S M, to realize the latter sum and pay it to the M O Society, for S M, in terms of the regulations of the Society." Held, that the bequest was primâ facie for the benefit of the daughter. That having regard to the regulations of the M O Society, the bequest was a gift for the benefit of the Society generally. That if the will had given the mother the interest for life, instead of saying it had been given, it would have vested. R and C. By her will she directed that her daughter R should enjoy the rents and profits of certain immoveable property for her life, and that after her death the said property should be sold and the sale-proceeds (after payment of two legacies thereout) be divided equally between her two sons S and J. The seventh clause of the will was as follows: "7. I further direct that the amount which may fall to the share of my son Joaquim Amador Bocarro under (c) of paragraph 6 above should be held in trust by my executors hereinafter named and converted by them into Government securities; the interest accruing therefrom should be paid for the maintenance of my said son Joaquim Amador Bocarro. Should my said son die leaving a widow or issue, his share shall be given to such widow or issue according as he may devise and bequeath. Should my said son Joaquim Amador Bocarro reform himself, and take off all his evil tendencies, and lead a steady, quiet, and orderly life, or should he, on account of illness or other reasonable cause, be in urgent need of pecuniary assistance, I leave it to the discretion of my executors either to make over to my said son Joaquim Amador Bocarro for his absolute use the whole of the amount which he may be entitled to under (c) of paragraph sixth above or such part or parts thereof as to my executors may appear proper." S died in 1885, unmarried and intestate, leaving his two brothers, M and J, and his two sisters, R and C, him surviving. M died in 1889, leaving a widow and children. In 1891 J mortgaged all his interest under the said will to the plaintiffs to secure a loan of R6,100. In 1893 R died, and in 1894 C died. Subsequently the executors were proceeding to sell the property mentioned in the will when the plaintiffs filed this suit praying for a declaration that they had a valid charge upon J's interest therein, and that his interest should be ascertained and declared, and he himself ordered to pay the amount of their claim; that the property should be sold and their claim paid out of the funds; that the executors should be restrained from selling, save subject to their (plaintiff's) rights, etc. The plaintiffs and J contended that he (J), in the event that had happened, was entitled to the whole of the proceeds of the property absolutely, and that the gift in the sixth clause of the will could not be cut down by the provisions of the seventh clause. Held, (i) that the defendant J had no interest in the house mentioned in the will. He was only entitled to a share of the proceeds after it had been sold. (ii) That his interest in his share of such proceeds was merely a life-interest with power to appoint to his widow or issue, and that he was not entitled to be paid the corpus of such share, but that the executors might, under certain circumstances and at their discretion, hand over to him the said corpus. (iii) That neither the plaintiffs nor J could interfere in the sale of the said property. (iv) That the plaintiffs had a valid charge upon J's interest in the sale-proceeds of the said property to the extent of their mortgage. (v) That J's interest was (after deducting the

(vi) As to costs, the plaintiffs and third defendant J should pay their own costs; that the executors and defendants Nos. 4 to 12 should have their costs paid out of J's share in S's moiety of the sale-proceeds, and, if that fund were not sufficient to pay such costs, the plaintiffs and the third defendant J to pay the deficiency. To that extent the absolute gift to J was qualified. Should the gift over fail, the absolute gift to J would remain unimpaired. Held, as to the costs (varying the decree of the Court below), that the executor's costs, taxed as between attorney and client, be paid out of the estate as well as the costs of the defendants 4 to 12. Plaintiffs and J to bear their own costs respectively: plaintiffs to be at liberty to add their costs to their mortgage-security. 56. ——— Bequest to executors and trustees in trust for son of testator and his widow—Life-interest—Estate in fee—control and management of executors and trustees. A Hindu by his will bequeathed certain property to his executors and trustees "upon trust for my son T and his heirs from the time of my death to allow him to occupy and use the same, and to enjoy the income thereof, and after the death of my son T, in trust to allow his widow to occupy and use the same and enjoy the income during her life; but if the said T shall die without leaving male issue him surviving, then in trust after the death of the survivor of them without leaving such male issue to my son T and his heirs according to the rules of Hindu law." The sons T and P both survived the testator and T had a wife and three sons living at the date of suit. In a suit by the executors and trustees against T for construction of the will, T contended that under the above clause, he was absolutely entitled to the property subject to the interest of his widow for her life. The plaintiffs contended that T had only a life-interest in the property. Held, that the defendant T took only an interest for life in the property. The words "in trust for T and his heirs," which, standing alone, would give the property in fee, were to be read with the words immediately following, which showed a clear intention that T should only take a life-interest, to be followed by the same interest in his widow, after whom the heirs of T would take as purchasers. Held, also, that the trustees were intended to take the legal estate any to have the control of the property, allowing T to enjoy the income of it. 57. ——— Bequest to wife with obligation of maintaining and educating children—Interest taken under such bequest. B died in 1891 leaving a widow (defendant No. 1) and two sons, P and D (defendants Nos 4 and 5). By his will he bequeathed the residue of his property to trustees (of whom his widow was one) in trust to pay the rents and income thereof to his widow for life, "she thereout maintaining, educating, and bringing up" his children in a manner suitable to their degree in life. After his death, the property moveable and immoveable, was to be divided, among his sons equally when D should attain the age of twenty-five. He attained majority in October 1895. At the date of suit D was eighteen years old and P was twenty-five. It was contended that the widow was only a trustee of the rents for the benefit for her sons P and D. Held, that under the will the widow took a life-interest in the rents subject to the obligation of maintaining, educating, and bringing up the children. The only two surviving children (P and D), having attained majority and having received property under the will of an uncle, were now no longer in need of being maintained by the widow. The obligation imposed upon her therefore by her husband's will was discharged, and she was now entitled to a life-interest free from all further obligation to maintain his children. 58. ——— Trust—Creation of trust—Uncertainty. A Hindu by his will, after appointing certain persons executors for the purpose of managing his estate after his death, gave them the following directions: "You should give my brothers, their wives and children, according to your wishes." Held, that no trust was created by these words. the whole of my property both real and personal (described), feeling confident that she will act justly to our children in dividing the same when no longer required by her." M A R, by her will, left to the children certain portions of such property, leaving to the child A C R, amongst other things certain banking shares. These shares were attached in the execution of a decree against the executors to her estate as belonging to such estate. Held, by the High Court, that she took under her husband's will a life interest only in his property with a power of appointment in favour of the children, and that the shares belonged to A C R, and could not be sold in execution of the decree as part of the estate of M A R. Held, by the Privy Council, reversing the decision of the High Court, that the widow took an absolute interest in the property, and that no trust for the benefit of the children was created. 61. ——— Expression of wish—Bequest. A testatrix, entitled to Government notes under a gift, coupled with the condition that she was to receive only the interest during her life, and that after her death, the notes were to be held in trust for all her heirs, gave the following directions to S K, whom she made her principal legatee: "I direct S K, under this will, to pay every month R644-7-1 (being one-third of R1,933-5-4, my monthly pay allowed by the Government for notes, which are deposited) to my dependents and personal servants, as detailed below. . . . . Be it known that the expenses of the imambarra, etc., will be continued for ever; and also the pay of G K and M A will be defrayed for ever, i.e., generation after generation. The rest of the servants will be paid for life only." Held, that these words constituted a bequest, and were not merely the expression of a wish. Also that the bequest was not one of legacies payable out of a specified sum and no other; the statement that the monthly payments to be made amounted to one-third of the sum received monthly by the testatrix not limiting the source of the legacies. 62. ——— Will confirming trust-deed—Construction of deed—Forfeiture. S, being desirous of securing and settling his property, executed a deed of trust whereby he conveyed and assigned all his real and personal property unto trustees, upon (among others) the following trust: that immediately after his death the trustees should convey, assign, transfer, and make over all the premises mentioned in the deed unto such person or persons as S should, by his last will, attested by two witnesses, direct and appoint, and in default of such direction and appointment, unto the next heirs of S, their heirs and assigns, for ever, and in the meantime to pay the Government revenue out of the rents and profits of the real property, and employ the residue and accumulations as well as the produce and accumulations of the personal property "in such a manner as may procure the daily worship of the household idols" mentioned in the deed and pay what they considered a fair and proper sum to the wives and family of S living at his death and residing in the family dwelling-house. By his will, dated the same day as the deed, S declared that he ratified and confirmed the deed, subject to such provisions as were contained in his will, which were that the trustees should not charge the fund for the maintenance of those who should not live in the family dwelling-house and for the appointment of new trustees. Held, first, upon the authority of Wilson v. Pigott, 2 Ves. Jun., that the powers of the trustees (under the deed) did not cease on the death of S, and that the directions in the will, although not strictly within the words, amounted to a good appointment in equity, so that instead of the trustees of the deed conveying the property on the death of S to his son, they should contrive to hold subject to the trusts of the deed as modified by the will. Secondly, that the words "in such a manner as may procure the daily worship," etc., meant in such manner as shall be sufficient to procure the daily worship, etc., and that the trustees were not authorized to apply such portion of the trust funds as they in their discretion might think fit, but only such portion as was reasonably sufficient for those purposes. After the death of the testator, and before the period of distribution arrived, a son was born to B and one of the sons of A died intestate and unmarried. Held, that the after-born son of B was entitled to a double portion as one of the male children of the testator's brother, and that the share of the son of A was divisible among the surviving male and female children in equal shares. James (who was appointed a trustee) was an attesting witness to the will. The widow having died, Florence brought this suit, seeking to have it declared that James was incapacitated from taking under the will (by reason of his having attested it) and that she was entitled to a moiety of the property bequeathed. Held, that the share of the legacy to James, which had lapsed, fell into the residue. The effect of the bequest to the three children " or the survivors or the survivor of them " would, in case James had predeceased the testator, have been to take the case out of the ordinary rule that a legacy lapses where the legatee dies during the lifetime of the testator. But, as the two children had not survived James, the contingency on the happening of which they were to take had not happened. The testator having made a testamentary disposition which was incapable of taking effect, the share of James fell into the residue. The doctrine of acceleration could not be applied to such a case. 67. ——— Bequest to " eldest son to be born "—Bengali will—Terms of art—Words, of direct and simple gift—Vesting of a bequest, words necessary for—" Parjyapta haibek," meaning and effect of—Appointment of guardian with direction to make over gift on legatee attaining majority, effect of —Judges trying a cause consulting another Judge, propriety of—Ex parte hearing—Re-hearing, application by respondent for—Unconscionable bargain. In construing Bengali wills, it must be remembered that there is no line of precedents attaching to Bengali terms meanings which make them understood as terms of art by Bengali lawyers. The only safe course is to give to the words their plain and ordinary meaning. There are no particular words necessary to the vesting of a bequest or a legacy. The words " parjyapta haibek; " whether they mean " descend to " or " devolve or go " or " shall become vested," have the effect of vesting the legacy at once. Where there is a bequest in favour of a person simply, it confers a vested interest, and the appointment of an executor and guardian to that person while he is a minor with a direction to make over the property to him on his attaining majority, does not postpone the vesting of the bequest. Judges who have heard the arguments and who are responsible for the decision, can hardly with propriety rest it on the authority of one who has not heard the arguments and is not responsible for the decision though he also may be a Judge of the High Court. F had in August 1892, sold her interest in a certain moiety under a will, together with an allowance of R50 per month, which, she took under the will, to one A L B, and W on the same date disposed of all his interest in the said moiety to A L B who assigned the interest he took under both sales to H for R9,000. of the rights of the parties under it the High Court, on the view that F would, on their construction of the will, be entitled to a large amount of accumulations of the moiety, which together with her allowance she had been induced to part with to A L B for only R3,000: Held, on the facts, that the bargain was an unconscionable one and could not be sustained. On the construction put on the will by the Judicial Committee on appeal F took no interest in the moiety of the residuary estate, and had assigned nothing but her allowance; there was therefore no ground for holding the assignment to A L B to be an unconscionable bargain. To validate such a gift, it is not necessary that the institution to be benefited should be a corporate body; it is sufficient if there be some responsible authority charged with the general administration of the funds of the institution. Under s. 90 of the Succession Act, property which is the subject-matter of a trust which is incapable of taking effect primâ facie falls into the residue, and it can only be prevented from so doing by the express directions of the testator. In re Bagot, [1893] 3 Ch. 348, and Blight v. Hartnell, *L. 70. _____ Succession Act (X of 1865) s. 105—Bequest to charitable uses by a testator leaving a widow him surviving—Validity—"Nearer relative" than a nephew or niece. By s. 105 of the Indian Succession Act, no man having a nephew or niece or any "nearer relative" shall have power to bequeath any property to charitable uses, except by will executed not less than twelve months before his death and deposited as by the section is provided. A testator by his will bequeathed property to charitable uses, and died two days thereafter, leaving to widow him surviving. On question being raised as to the validity of the bequest:—Held, that the bequest was valid. The term "relative" in s. 105 of the Succession Act refers to kindred only, as set forth in the table of consanguinity annexed to s. 24 of the Act, and has no application to any relationship by marriage. 71. _____ Executor—Suit by legatee against executor for arrears of rent—Limitation. A Hindu died leaving a son, a daughter, a widow and a brother's widow. He left a will whereby he directed that the two widows should receive "half and half" the annual income realized from the four houses which he specified, and that on the death of one of them the survivor should take the whole for her life. The son was to make repairs and to pay the municipal taxes payable in respect of the said houses, but he was to have "no manner of right whatever to the income" thereof. He was also to provide the widows with food and clothing for their life, and to provide the expenses of the marriage of the testator's daughter. Except as abovementioned, the whole of the testator's property, movable and immovable, was left to the son. The plaintiff (one of the widows) sued to recover the rent of the four houses which had accrued since the testator's death. It was contended that by the will the four houses were given to the widows. Held, that the son was the sole owner of the whole property. The will, however, had imposed upon him the duties of an executor, and he should be treated as such. There was thus a fiduciary relation established between him and the widows, and they were entitled to the arrears of rent for the whole period claimed. RAMDHAN v. MANIBAI (1900) . . . . . I. L. A question arose between an executor and a residuary legatee as to whether, under a will, the legatee was entitled to have the residue handed over to him on his attaining majority or whether such payment was not to be postponed until he reached the age of twenty-five, the executor in the meantime having a right to the income. The Court held that payment should be made to the legatee on his attaining majority, and that the will conferred on the executor no right to the income. The executor applied for leave to appeal to the Privy Council, and contended that the matter in dispute was of the value of R10,000, as required by s. 596 of the Civil Procedure Code, inasmuch as it involved the right to the whole fund. Held, refusing leave, that the subject-matter of the dispute was only the income, and was not of the requisite value. The case had proceeded on the hypothesis that the executor had the corpus of the estate as a trustee, and the only question was as to the income. The bequest of the residuary estate was held to be a valid charitable bequest. The direction to spend and give away the whole of the residue in charity governs the words that immediately follow, and therefore the purposes for which the fund is to be spent must be charitable, although they may at the same time be religious. Ram Gopal Bonnerjea v. *Sibkissen Bonnerjea, 1 Bom. 81. ——— Construction—Rule against perpetuity—Succession Act (X of 1865), s. 101. Clause 13 of the will produced in this case was as follows :—"As to my other property, which there is, that is the property situated on the east side of the house of my step-brother, I give the same to my younger son Chiranjiv Mahadev for his life. He shall have no authority either to mortgage or to sell the said property. He shall only receive the income of the said property and I give the property after his death to his son or to his sons in equal share should there be (any such son or sons). In case he leaves no son behind him my mukhtears shall get a son adopted by his wife and thus perpetuate his name. And they shall give the said property to him on his attaining the age of 21 years. Held, on a construction of the above clause, that the bequest in favour of a son of Mahadev, who might be adopted at any time after Mahadev's death by a widow, who might not have been living at the testator's decease, was void under s. 101 of the Succession Act (X of 1865). A question having arisen as to whether the expression "when and so soon as he the said Ardeshir shall be free from such debts and liabilities as aforesaid" had reference only to debts and liabilities existing at the time when the residue was divisible. Held, that the debt, and liabilities to which the clause related were debts or any liabilities likely to result in a debts or debts of more than Rupees five thousand and it was with debts of that description that a comparison was implied by the word "such." Time was no part of their description and reference was made to time only to indicate the event on which certain consequences were to follow according as debts and liabilities of the description indicated did or did not exist. —Where trust in favour of party in whom legal estate vested, equitable estate merges in the legal estate—General disposition of whole estate will not be cut down, unless intention so to cut down is clear. Will must be construed as a whole—The words "as she may require" mean, "as may be necessary." In construing wills, the test to be applied is what did the testator mean, having regard to the words used. Technical words or words of known legal import must have their legal effect even though the testator uses inconsistent words, unless those inconsistent words are of such a nature as to make it perfectly clear that the testator did not mean to use the technical terms in their proper sense. Per LORD DAVEY in Lalit Mohan Singh Roy v. Chukkun Lal Roy, I. L. R. 24 Calc. 834, 846, referred to. The words "in trust" do not invariably create a trust. The principle that a trustee cannot take beneficially has no application where the trust is in terms in favour of the party, in whom the legal estate is vested. Where both the legal and equitable estate are given to the same person, the two estates merge, and the person to whom they are given, takes the legal estate. Where a testator devises all his property, the generality of the disposition will not be cut down, unless the intention so to cut down is clear. The will must be construed as a whole and in a manner consistent with the intentions of the testator and its general tenor. The words "as to her may seem best" mean "as she may think fit." Where a person is authorised to draw money for certain purposes "as he may require," he can draw only such amounts "as may be necessary" for the purpose and not any amount "as he may think fit." A will contained the following, inter alia, clauses:—(I) "I will and bequeath to my dear wife Annie in trust and for her maintenance and support during her life all the money, property, goods and chattels, of which I may die possessed whatsoever and wheresoever situated and I appoint my dear wife Annie sole administratrix of this my last will and testament." (X) "I further will that my dear wife Annie as sole executrix of this my last will and testament shall draw from current deposit accounts whether here or in Great Britain such sum or sums of money as she may require for her maintenance and for the working and maintenance of my property, and that she shall receive and dispose of all proceeds, rents and profits from the said property as to her may seem best in the interest of the property and I empower her to sell all or any part of the property at any time, when it may appear to her that a favourable opportunity occurs." On the question whether the widow of the testator took an absolute life estate or whether the words "in trusts," in clause (1) read with the words "she shall receive and dispose of . . . in the interest of the property" in clause (X) constituted her a trustee in respect of such portion of the income as was not required by her for her maintenance and support. Held (i), that the words "in trust" in clause (1) were not intended to create any trust, but only to indicate the nature of her estate and that she should enjoy only the income for her life and should not deal with the corpus except as authorised by the will. (ii) That clause (X) did not create any trust, and that the words 'she shall receive and dispose . . . in the interests of the property' were simply enabling words, which authorised her to apply, as she thought fit, the income of the property, upon the property. The testator intended that she should have an unfettered discretion in the maintenance and development of the property, without being questioned by any one interested in the reversion. (iii) That a life estate was given to the widow by the words "during her life" and such estate was not cut down by the words "for her maintenance and support" which were simple words of description or motive, and that, if a trust was intended, it was for her benefit only, in which case the legal and equitable estate merged and she took the legal estate. (iv) The words "as she may require" in clause (X) did not authorise the widow to draw any amount "as she thought fit," but only such amount as should be "necessary for the purposes stated." (v) That there was nothing in clause (X) which showed a clear intention on the part of the testator to cut down the estate given by clause (I) and the widow accordingly took a life-estate. Gourachandra Gajapati Narayana Deo, Zamindar of Parlakimedi, all that I may possess at the time of my death, including my property at Kodaikanal, and shares and other property in the Commercial Land Mortgage Bank, Madras, also books, furniture and other property movable and immovable and I appoint the said S. S. S. Gourchandra Gajapati Narayana Deo to be my sole executor. I have no doubt he will carry out my wishes. In witness whereof I, the said William Taylor, have to this, my last will and testament, set my name this 19th day of April one thousand eight hundred and ninety-two (1892). *W. Subsequent to his death, a letter written by him bearing date 28th April 1895 and addressed to the then zamindar of Parlakimedi (the legatee under the will) and containing an endorsement that it was to be opened after the death of W. T. was found. The letter directed the legatee to convert the testator's property into money and remit the proceeds to R. T., brother of *W. WHITE, C.J., and SANKARAN-NAIR, J., that the letter of the 28th April 1895, not having been communicated in the testator's lifetime did not operate to create a trust in favour of R. T., either under the rule of English Law or under section 5 of the Trusts Act. The Legislature in enacting the proviso to section 5 of the Indian Trusts Act did not intend to depart from the English Law and the Court will impose a trust on a legatee only when there is fraud according to English Law. Manuel Louis Kunha v. Jnana Coelho, I. L. R. 31 Mad. 187, referred to. Per SIR ARNOLD WHITE, C. J. —The letter is not admissible to show that the testator did not intend the legatee to take the interest which the will purported to give him. "Attendant circumstances" in section 81 of the Trusts Act means the same as surrounding circumstances and it is only when the latter can be considered for the purpose of ascertaining the intention of the testator under the English Law that evidence of an attendant circumstance can be given to show that the testator did not intend to dispose of the beneficial interest in property devised by will. Under the English law the letter could not be looked at to show that the legatee under the will was not intended to take the beneficial interest and the Indian law is the same. In re Boyes Boyes v. Carritt, 26 Ch. D. 531, distinguished. Where the "attendant circumstances" show an intention to dispose of the beneficial interest to any one, whether he is or not the legatee named in the will, there will be no resulting trust under section 81 of the Trust Act. The words "I have no doubt he will carry out my wishes" do not show that it was not the intention of the testator to dispose of the beneficial interest. In the case of wills executed by an English testator, the law of "benami" cannot be applied so as to override the provisions of the Trusts Act or the Succession Act or the English principles of equity on which these provisions are based. Per SANKARAN-NAIR, J., that the letter may be looked at for the purpose of determining whether the legatee was only a benamidar or trustee for some other person. It is also admissible to show that the legatee was only a trustee under section 81 of the Trust Act. An "attendant circumstance" under section 81 of the Trust Act, means a circumstance that accompanies or follows the transfer or bequest. The letter was intended to accompany or follow the will and may therefore be taken into consideration to discover the intentions of the testator. The letter must be read with the words of the will that the testator had no doubt that the legatee would carry out his wishes; and the two read together clearly show that the legatee was not intended to take any beneficial interest. It was held upon evidence, which was very conflicting, in some respects obscure and unsatisfactory, and in reference to which the Court below had differed, that the will was genuine, and that the High Court was not justified in reversing a decree to that effect. It was also held that it is the duty of a Judge in such cases patiently to investigate the actual facts, placing himself as it were in the position of the alleged testator with all his actual surroundings; not to approach the subject from the point of view of what a testator ought or would be likely to have done on some preconceived idea of Hindu usages and habits of thought. 6. _____ Proof of due execution of will where the mental capacity of testator is in dispute—Rules for decision of such cases—Presumption—Duty of Appellate Court in deciding on evidence of witnesses. In all cases in which the evidence is conflicting, it is the duty of a Court of appeal to have great regard to the opinion formed by the Judge, in whose presence the witnesses gave their evidence, as to the degree of credit to be given to it; and probably the advantage of hearing the witnesses give their evidence is of special value where there is conflict between them as to the mental capacity of a person whose conduct they have observed, and whose state of mind they depose to: for the original Court had not merely the better opportunity of judging of the truthfulness of the evidence from the manner in which it is given, but also of judging how far the witnesses possess those qualities on which depends, much of the value of evidence given in good faith, viz., power of observation, power of judgment, accuracy of expression, and general intelligence, which are of special importance in cases where the execution of a will is disputed on the ground that at the time the will was alleged to have been made, the mental capacity of the testator was such that it was doubtful whether the will could have been "duly executed." "Due execution" of a will implies not only that the testator was in such a state of mind as to be able to authorize, and to know he was authorizing the execution of a document as his will, but also that he knew and approved of the contents of the instrument; and in such cases of disputed execution the Judge should consider and express an opinion upon both these questions. In ordinary cases execution of a will by a competent testator raises the presumption (sufficient, if nothing appears to the contrary, to establish) that he knew and approved of the contents of the will. Also under ordinary circumstances the competency of a testator will be presumed if nothing appears to rebut the ordinary presumption: ordinarily, therefore, proof of execution of the will is enough. But where the mental capacity of the testator is challenged by evidence, which shows that it is, to say the least, very doubtful whether his state of mind was such that he could have "duly executed" the will as he is alleged to have done, the Court ought to find whether upon the evidence the testator was of sound disposing mind and did know and approve of the contents of the will. Where this had not been done, the Appellate Court, after considering the whole evidence, held, contrary to the decision of the lower Court, that the will was not proved and refused probate. 7. _____ Proof of execution of will—Probabilities—Evidence. The fact of the execution of a will was disputed by a testator's relations. They impugned the will mainly on the theory of the improbability of its having been executed by him under the circumstances existing at the time, and in the presence of the witnesses alleged to have attested it. They admitted his intention to execute such a will, but contended that, having long deferred the execution, he had died without having effected it. To outweigh the strong and satisfactory evidence upon which the affirmative of due execution rested, it would have been necessary that the improbabilities should have been cogent and clearly made out. But in their Lordship's opinion, it was neither the one nor the other, and was based on an exaggerated view. The suggested inferences against the will were not borne out; and, on the other hand, the testimony in support of it was good. The judgment of the High Court, maintaining the will, was affirmed. may still be capable of devising and of executing a will of a simple character, although unfit to originate or to comprehend all the details of a complicated settlement. In one sense the testator may not have been in the state which the witnesses, described as "his full senses." He was feeble in body. The vigour of his mind was impaired, and his utterance was defective. On the other hand, there was nothing in the evidence which could reasonably lead to the inference that he was incapable of understanding such business as fell to his lot, or of regulating the succession to his property. At the hearing of the suit, it was alleged that he was subject to insane delusions, as to which, however, the Courts below concurred in finding that they had not been shown to have existed. The statements made by him alleged to have been the result of delusion, had not been shown to be altogether without foundation. As to this, their Lordships' opinion was that, in order to constitute an insane delusion affecting the question of testamentary capacity, it should have been shown, not only that it was unfounded, but also that it was so destitute of foundation that no one, save an insane person, would have entertained it. The judgment that this testator had not testamentary capacity appeared to them to have had the unsafe basis of speculative theory derived from medical books and judicial dicta in other cases, and not to have been founded on the facts proved in this. 9. _____ Incapacity from illness—Influence not amounting to coercive influence. A Khoja Mahomedan resident in Bombay made his will in 1886, appointing his wife, and his eldest son by a former wife, to execute it. The testator died on the 9th February 1891, having at different times, in the interval, made four codicils. The widow, applying for probate, of all the above, propounded a fifth codicil, alleging it to have been made by her husband on the 6th February 1891. The son petitioned for probate to be delivered to him and to the widow, but only of the will and of the first two codicils, contesting the three later codicils as having been made under undue influence exercised by the wife. He disputed the last codicil, not only on the ground of undue influence, if the codicil had been in fact executed, but because at the time of the alleged execution his father was almost unconscious, and unable to understand what he was doing. The High Court, in its original testamentary jurisdiction, refused probate of the three disputed codicils, granting probate of the will and of the first two codicils only. The Appellate High Court granted probate of the will and of the five codicils, finding that no undue influence had been exercised, and that the fifth had been executed by the testator with knowledge and comprehension of its contents and of his free volition. The Judicial Committee affirmed the judgment of the Appellate Court as to the absence of undue influence. In their opinion, if there was not evidence, and there was not, to show coercion in the special matter of the codicils, general assertions of the wife's commanding character, and of the husband's weakness, and of their differences went for little. But in regard to the fifth codicil, they affirmed the judgment of the original Court, finding the evidence to have left open the inference that the testator had been at the time when it was alleged by the widow that he had made this codicil too exhausted and ill for such a testamentary act. 10. _____ Execution of will—Evidence on the question of whether the testator was of sound disposing mind at time of execution—Reversal by Appellate Court of decision of Judge who heard evidence and entirely disbelieved their testimony—Onus of proof. On a contested application for probate in which the question was whether a testator was of sound disposing mind on two separate occasions when he was alleged to have executed a will and a codicil, the Judge who saw and heard the witnesses decided that the only reliable evidence was that of the doctor who attended the testator and attested the two documents, and that if the doctor's evidence was true, then that of the principal witnesses in support of the will could not be; and he therefore disbelieved their story as to the execution of the documents, and dismissed the application for probate. The Appellate Court being of opinion that he had not given adequate consideration to the possibility that in spite of the testator's physical infirmity, his mental capacity was sufficient, reversed the decision and granted probate of the will and codicil. Held, by the Judicial Committee (reversing the judgment of the Appellate Court), that the medical evidence entirely justified the view of the Judge who heard the evidence, namely, that it left the onus on the plaintiff who propounded the will quite undischarged, so that in the absence of other reliable evidence he had no alternative but to dismiss the application. It is always difficult for Judges who have not seen or heard the witnesses to refuse to adopt the conclusions of fact of those who have, but that difficulty is greatly aggravated when the Judge who heard them has formed the opinion not only that their inferences are unsound on the balance of probability against their story, but that they are not witnesses of the truth. Coghlan v. Cumberland, [1898] 1 Ch. 705, referred to. according to the testator's instructions by the person entrusted with its preparation, who moreover was fully conversant with the testator's affairs and was apparently on intimate terms with him, so that the testator would have ample reason for believing that the will placed before him for signature was drawn up in accordance with his instructions, it should be considered his will if he set his hand to it, and it would not be necessary to prove that at the time he was capable of understanding all its provisions. Perera v. Perera, [1901] A. C. 354, referred to. Held, on the facts of the case, that the testator was not merely supposing that he was executing a will but possessed at the time sufficient intelligence to be able to understand the provisions of the will, which were of the simplest character, though he might not possibly have been able to follow every sentence of the will. In a suit brought by B as executor of A, according to the tenor of these documents against the widow of A, for the purpose of having probate of them granted to him as of the will of the deceased:—Held (reversing the judgment of MACPHERSON, J.), that the documents were only intended to have a testamentary effect in the event of A's having died of the sickness he was suffering from at the time of writing, and therefore probate which had been granted by the Court at the original hearing was ordered to be brought in and cancelled. The executor renounced, and no probate of the will or letters of administration, with the will annexed, was granted. In a suit by the testator's sole heiress for construction of the will and for administration, the Court allowed the execution of the will to be proved in Court, declared that it was void for uncertainty, and directed the usual administration accounts to be taken. 2. _____ Executor—Intermeddling with estate—Degree of interference necessary to charge executor—Suit for account against executor—Account on footing of wilful default —Practice—Limitation—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), s. 10, Sch. II, Art. 120. In law a very small interference or intermeddling with the estate of his testator on the part of a party appointed executor under a will is sufficient to charge him with liability as executor. An executor once having acted unqestionably as an executor cannot renounce that character and all the liabilities which attach to it, and, having once acted, the subsequent renunciation is void, and he continues liable to be sued in the character of an executor Rogers v. Frank, 1 Y. & J. 409, followed. Modern practice allows of an order charging wilful default being made at any time during the action on a proper case being shown. The plaintiff brought a suit against the executors of the will of her grandfather, praying for a declaration that she was absolutely entitled to the property of her grandfather and for an account of the property in the hands of the executors. The plaintiff claimed as heir and not under the will. Held, that she was only entitled to accounts for six years preceding the suit as she took no interest in the property under the will, and the executors were not trustees for her and the property did not vest in them for any specific purpose in her favour. Such a suit is not a suit for the purpose of following such property in the hands of the executors and trustees. AYESHABAI v. EBRAHIM (1908).

8. REVOCATION.

1. _____ Evidence as to revocation of a will—Onus of proof of revocation of will. A will duly executed is not to be treated as revoked either wholly or in part, by a will which is not forthcoming, unless it is proved by clear and satisfactory evidence that the will contained either words of revocation or disposition so inconsistent with those of the earlier will that the two cannot stand together. It is not enough to show that the will which is not forthcoming differed from the earlier one, if it cannot be shown, in what the difference consisted. It is also settled that the burden of proof lies upon him who challenges the existing will. These propositions are of general application. MIRZA v. UMDA KHANAM. MIRZA v. GUNNA KHANAM . I. L. 2. _____ Revocation of portion of will—New page of will not duly executed substituted by testator after execution of will—Dependant relative revocation—Probate. After the death of the testator (H. G. Meakin), his will was found among his private papers in a sealed envelope with the words "H. G. Meakin's will, not to be opened until after death," written in his handwriting on the face of the envelope. The will was wholly in his writing, and was written on four separate sheets of paper pinned together. The first, third and fourth pages were of blue paper and of the same size, and each of them was signed at the bottom by the testator and by two witnesses. The fourth page stated the date of the will and was signed by the testator and was duly attested by the said two witnesses. The actual execution of the will took place (as was proved by evidence) in March or April 1894. The second page, however, was of a different kind of a paper from the other pages and of smaller size, and was signed by the testator, but not by witnesses. This second page contained a bequest to a child who was born in May 1894, i.e., some months after the will was executed. The executors propounded the will. Held, that probate must be refused. 3. _____ Lost Will—Presumption of revocation—Secondary evidence—Onus of proof—Probate and Administration Act (V of 1881), ss. 20, 24. If a will, shown to have been in the custody of the testator, is not forthcoming at the time of his death, it is presumed to have been destroyed by him, unless there is sufficient evidence to rebut the presumption. Welch v. *Phillipps, 1 Moo. another presumption may well arise, namely, that when such a document is not forthcoming after the testator's death, it has been mislead. 4. ——— Will—Separated Hindu domiciled in the United Provinces—Revocation of will—Evidence—Presumption. A separated Hindu residing at Meerut executed a will on the 20th of January, 1885, and registered the same in the office of the District Registrar on the 22nd of January of the same year. The testator died on the 16th of October, 1899. On the 8th of July 1902, a suit was instituted by certain persons who claimed the property of the testator as his next-of-kin against the Collector of Meerut who had taken possession of the property as trustee under the terms of the will for purposes therein set forth. The plaintiffs alleged that the testator had revoked the will of the 20th of January 1885, and tendered evidence to prove that on a certain occasion the testator had said that he had revoked his will. On the death of the testator the original will was not to be found; but, on the other hand, it was shown that persons interested in the disappearance of the will had had access to the house of the testator since his death. Held, that evidence that the testator had said that he had torn up the will was not admissible. Staines v. *Stewart and Jones, 2 Sw. & Tr. 320, Doe dem. ——— Practice—Civil Administration—Further directions—Advocate General by consent, added as party—Right to question validity of legacies—Estoppel—Laches—State demand—Khoja Mahomedan Will—Gift to a class—construction. M, A Khoja Mahomedan, died in 1864. By his will and codicil he left his property to trustees, upon trust, inter alia, to pay his daughter L, a monthly sum during her life and, after her death, to pay it to her children. M's residuary estate was charged in favour of certain charitable objects. In 1868 the Advocate General commenced a suit (962 of 1868) for the administration of M's estate. In 1869 L died, leaving four children surviving her. In 1871 a decree for the administration of M's estate was granted to R, the husband of L, in another suit (370 of 1870). In 1873 a decree for administration was passed in the Advocate General's suit (962 of 1868). By the decree the Advocate General was given liberty to join in taking the accounts and making the enquiries directed in suit 370 of 1870. In 1899 the Commissioner made his final report in suit 370 of 1870, to which, however, exceptions were filed. In 1902 the case came before TYABJI, J., for further directions. Up to this date the validity of the gift to L's children had not been questioned by the parties and the Commissioner's report was based on the assumption that it was valid. The Advocate General was now, by consent of the parties, joined as a co-defendant, to simplify and regularize the suit. He thereupon contended that the gift to L's children was bad as transgressing the rule laid down in the Tagore case and claimed that the fund was applicable to the charitable purposes indicated in the residuary gift. The Division Court ruled that the Advocate General was not entitled at this stage to raise the point. Held (reversing TYABJI, J.), that the Advocate General was not precluded, even at this stage, from questioning the validity of the gift to L's children. Where the accounts actually taken and completed in one suit are adopted in another, the ordinary practice is to allow the result of those accounts and enquiries to be questioned in the suit, wherein they are adopted. A beneficiary is generally taken as sufficiently represented by his trustees; but this does not hold good, where the contest lies between the beneficiaries themselves. Held, on further hearing, on the construction of the will, that such of L's children as were in existence at the death of the testator were entitled to the annuity at L's death. 2. _____ Probate—Deed-poll executed at same time as will and referred to in it—Will giving benefit to solicitor, who prepared it—Onus of proof—Testamentary writing—Succession Act (X of 1865), s. 51. A will made reference to a deed-poll which was executed at the same time, and also contanied clauses under which the solicitor, who prepared it, took some benefit, and was appointed an executor of the will, and a trustee of the testator's estate. The first Court granted probate of the whole will, but the High Court on appeal varied that order by directing that the passage referring to the deed-poll and that giving remuneration to the solicitor should be omitted in the grant of probate. Held, by the Judicial Committee, that the onus was on the solicitor to show that the deed-poll and the disputed parts of the will expressed the true intention of the testator, who understood and approved of them, and that on the evidence and under the circumstances of the case he had discharged that onus. The law relating to the case of person taking a benefit under a will prepared by himself as laid down by Lord Wensleydale in Barry v. Butlin, 2 Moo. P. C. 480, and approved of in Fulton v. Andrew, L. R. 7 H. L. 448, followed. Held, also, that the deed-poll was not a testamentary document requiring probate, the reference to it in the will not being for the purpose of making, or so as to make, its contents parts of the will; it was, therefore, not within s. 51 of the Succession Act (X of 1865). 3. _____ Will—Execution, proof—Probate, delay in taking—Probate taken on necessity arising—Revocation, application for, made after the death of persons competent to give best evidence—Probate and Administration Act (V of 1881), s. 50. K died leaving an infant son, a daughter and a widow and some property of very trifling value. The son claimed to be heir through his mother to a large estate and this claim was then under litigation. The son died 5 years after K's death having shortly before obtained a decree for the said estate. The widow thereupon adopted K's brother's son, and then proved in common form a will purporting to be K's, which contained provisions for the prosecution of his son's claim under litigation, and directed his widow, to adopt K's brother's son should his son die, provisions being also made for his daughter out of his estate. On an application made 12 years later on behalf of K's daughter's son for revocation of the probate, the High Court held the terms of the will to be reasonable and the evidence sufficient to establish the will considering the difficulty of establishing a will so long after its execution, the persons who would be expected to give the best evidence in the matter having died. The Judicial Committee affirmed that decision and pointed out that the delay in taking out probate was accounted for by the fact that, until K's son's death and the adoption in his place, there was no very urgent necessity for taking out probate, K's estate being of itself of trifling value. 4. _____ Will—Execution—Solicitor-executor preparing and attesting Will—Clause permitting him to charge for professional and other services—Proof—Onus—Independent advice—Fiduciary relation—Deed referred to in Will—Probate—Succession Act (X of 1865), s. 51. If a party writes or prepares a will, under which he takes a benefit, that is a circumstance that ought generally to excite the suspicion of the Court and calls upon it to be vigilant and jealous in examining the evidence in support of the instrument, in favour of which it ought not to pronounce, unless the suspicion is removed and it is judicially satisfied that the paper pronounced does express the true will of the deceased. Barry v. Butlin, 2 Moo. P. C. 480, and Fulton v. Andrew, L. R. 7 E. & I. Ap. 448, approved. But there is no rule of law as to the particular kind or description of evidence, by which the Court must be satisfied. The degree of suspicion excited and the weight of burden of removing it must depend largely on the nature and amount of the benefit taken and all the circumstances of the case. The question is a pure question of fact and one to be decided on consideration of the whole of the evidence and the circumstances of the case. A clause in the will in this case permitted the solicitor, who prepared and attested the will and was also appointed one of the executors, to charge for professional services done by him or his firm. It also allowed him a further remuneration of one per cent. on the profits of the testator's business, for services in connection with the management of the business. The Judicial Committee was satisfied that there was circumstances which showed that the testator understood and approved of the clause, although it appeared that the testator had no independent advice in this matter and no independent evidence was adduced that this clause in particular was called to the testator's attention. Where a deed-poll previously executed by the testator was referred to in the will, but not for the purpose of making its contents a part of the will:—Held, that it was not a testamentary document requiring probate, although the will in terms purported to confirm the deed. 7. _____ Blank spaces left in body of will—Alterations and erasures in will—Presumption—Pencil writing subsequent to the execution of the will—Intention of testator. The circumstance that blank spaces are left in the body of a will is no objection to its being a valid will. If a will contains alterations and erasures, the presumption will be that they were made after the will was executed; and if there is no evidence rebutting that presumption, they will form no part of the will. The lower Court, having declined to grant probate of a will (which it held to be proved), on the ground that it was an incomplete will, being of opinion that the blanks, alterations and cancellations in the will showed that the deceased intended it to be a draft, and not the final expression of his wishes:—Held, that, the will being one which did not require to be signed by the testator, probate should be granted to include a pencil addition proved to have been made by an attesting witness at the desire of the testator, but excluding all other additions, erasures, or cancellations. 12. ——— Test of ascertaining whether a document is a will or not—Irrevocability—Will. In ascertaining whether a document is a will one of the tests is to ascertain whether the document is revocable or not. The irrevocability of a document is perfectly inconsistent with its being a will. On the construction of a document propounded as a will:—Held, that it was not a will, but an erkrarnamah, the irrevocability of the document being perfectly inconsistent with its being a will, and the fact that it was registered as a non-testamentary document and was stamped further showing that the parties did not regard it as a will. 14. ——— Application for revocation—Validity of will, Proof in common form—Probate, delay in taking out—Will in solemn form—Onus of proof—Probate and Administration Act (V of 1881), s. 50—"Just cause." A will was executed the day before the death of the testator in 1878, and probate was obtained in 1884 in common form with issue of citations. On an application made in 1896 by the appellants for revocation of probate on the ground that the will was not genuine, the District Judge placed the onus on the respondents to prove the will and holding that the evidence was unreliable and insufficient, granted the application for revocation. The High Court reversed that order, being of opinion that, if the application were regarded as one to obtain proof of the will in solemn form it was without precedent after so long an interval from the date of probate. That the appellants should at least have shown when they became aware of the probate, and that considering the difficulty of proving the will in solemn form after the long time that had elapsed, there was sufficient evidence of its due execution. Also that, if the application was one under s. 50 of the Probate and Administration Act (V of 1881), in which case it was doubtful whether the burden of proof was not on the appellants to show that the will was fictitious, no "just cause" had been shown for revoking the probate. Held, on the evidence, that, under the circumstances of the case there was no ground for differing from the decision of the High Court. 15. ——— Evidence as to due execution and registration properly obtained—Proof of will—Presumption as to official acts duly performed. The registration of a document is a solemn act to be performed in the presence of a competent official appointed to act as Registrar, whose duty it is to attend the parties during the registration and see that the proper persons are present, and are competent to act, and are identified to his satisfaction, and all things done before him in his official capacity and verified by his signature will, unless it be shown that a deliberate fraud on him has been successfully committed be presumed to be done duly and in order. A will propounded in this case was upheld as being genuine on the evidence as to due execution and registration, and on the other circumstances and probabilities of the case and the decree of the High Court, which had reversed that of the Subordinate Judge, was affirmed. Evidence of the general reputation, of character of the identifiers in the Registration Office was inadmissible to refute the bonâ fides of

17. ——— Succession Act (X of 1865), ss. 101, 102—Hindu Wills Act (XXI of 1870), s. 3, para. 4. A power to distribute property conferred by a testator under his will, which is exercisable "when my grandsons may attain their age" is void under ss. 101 and 102 of the Indian Succession Act, as extending the period beyond the limit allowed by s. 101, whether the point of time referred to is taken to be the attaining of age by the grandsons in existence at the date of the testator's death or such attaining of age by all his grandsons. If the intention of the testator to benefit all his grandsons is clear from the will, the latter view ought to be adopted, and a secondary intention to benefit such grandsons at least as should be in existence at his death ought not to be assumed. The rule applicable to such cases in India is that "if the exercise of a power is made contingent on the happening of an event, which, may by possibility happen beyond the limits of the rule, the mere fact that the contingency has happened earlier and has rendered the exercise of the power practicable within the prescribed limit does not validate the power." S. 3, para. 4 of the Hindu Wills Act, has not the effect of making s. 101 of the Succession Act inapplicable to Hindu wills, when s. 2 makes it applicable in terms. S. 3 may have the effect of invalidating a disposition, which may be valid under s. 101, but it cannot have the effect of validating a disposition invalid under s. 101. WILLS ACT (XXV OF 1838).

——— s. 3—Application of Act—East Indians domiciled out of the jurisdiction of High Court. The Wills Act, XXV of 1838, applied to the wills of East Indians, whether domiciled within or beyond the testamentary jurisdiction of the High Court. HOGG v. GREENWAY . 2 Hyde 3

Held, on appeal, that the Wills Act only applied where the High Court had an exclusive jurisdiction analogous to that of the Ecclesiastical Court in England. It did not apply in the case of a person who was not entitled by birth or domicile to have applied to him the actual law of England. Therefore it did not apply to the case of an East Indian testatrix (the illegitimate daughter of a Mahomedan woman) who resided and died outside the limits of the ordinary civil jurisdiction of the Court. If the Court comes to the conclusion that the main original object for which the Company was formed has substantially failed or that the substratum of the Company is gone it will consider that it would be just and equitable to wind up the Company and will make an order for its compulsory winding up. 20. ——— Nature of fresh suit—Fresh suit filed upon a different title in existence at date of former suit—Civil Procedure Code (XIV of 1882), s. 373—Practice. The plaintiffs, who were an English joint stock company registered under the English Companies Act of 1862, used the defendant as a passed member of the bank, upon a balance order of the High Court of Justice in England, dated 24th February 1881, to recover the sum of £678-3. In August 1882 the plaintiffs had filed a previous suit against the defendant to recover the said sum of £678-3. That suit was based upon a call order, dated 11th November 1880, which it sought to enforce. By an order made in that suit on 7th April 1883, the plaintiffs were permitted to withdraw it, with liberty to bring a fresh suit for the same cause of action. The

21. ——— Withdrawal of suit by next friend—Suit on behalf of a minor—Civil Procedure Code (Act VIII of 1859), s. 97—Fraud. Where a Court has reason to believe that a suit is lawfully brought by a party who has a right to bring it on behalf of a minor, any withdrawal of the suit by that party would have precisely the same effect as the withdrawal of a suit by a person of full age. But where a person acting for a minor has fraudulently withdrawn the minor's suit under s. 97 of Act VIII of 1859, without obtaining leave to bring a fresh suit, and by such withdrawal an absolute statutory prohibition is imposed on the minor from bringing a fresh suit, it is open to the minor to relieve himself from the consequences of the fraud in one of three ways, viz., (i) by an application to the Court in the suit in which the withdrawal took place; (ii) by a regular suit to set aside the judgment founded upon the withdrawal; or (iii) by bringing a fresh suit for the same purpose, and setting up the fraud as an answer to the statutory bar. 22. ——— Withdrawal wrongly allowed—Arbitration—High Court's powers of revision—Civil Procedure Code, 1882, ss. 2, 373, 588, 622—Practice—Notice to show cause—Amendment of plaint. An order under s. 373 of the Civil Procedure Code permitting the withdrawal of a suit, with liberty to bring a fresh one, not being made appealable by s. 588, or being a "decree" within the meaning of s. 2, is not appealable. When the plaintiff in a suit applies for permission to withdraw it, with liberty to bring a fresh one, such permission should not be granted without the defendant being served with notice to show cause why such permission should not be granted. L, claiming as heir to H, a deceased Hindu, sued K, his widow, and G, a minor represented by his mother and guardian B, to have the adoption by K of G set aside and for certain other reliefs. The matters in difference in the suit were referred to arbitration, and an award was made in favour of the defendants. The plaintiff preferred objections to the award. Before these were disposed of, K died. The Court of first instance subsequently allowed the objections and set aside the award. The minor defendant then applied to the High Court for revision of the order setting aside the award. This application was rejected, on the ground that the order might be impugned on appeal from the decree in the suit. The plaintiff subsequently applied for permission to withdraw the suit, with liberty to bring a fresh one, on the ground that, K having died, he was entitled to possession of the immoveable property left by H. This permission was granted. The minor defendant applied to the High Court for revision. Held, that it might have been a very good ground for allowing the plaintiff to withdraw the suit that K, the adoptive mother of the minor defendant, had died pendente lite, had no arbitration proceedings taken place in the course of the suit; but when the parties had referred their differences to arbitration, and an award had been made in favour of the defendant and had been set aside, and an application for revision of the order setting it aside had been refused, on the ground that the matter could be made the subject of appeal from the final decree in the suit, permission to withdraw the suit and bring a fresh one should not have been granted. The minor defendant might be seriously prejudiced by such a course, and the suit had not abated against him by the death of K, while, on the other hand, a decree in the suit, if in his favour, would decide the litigation, and, if in favour of the plaintiff, would not prevent his bringing a suit for possession on the separate cause of action which had arisen. Stahlschmidt v. *Walford, L. The application was granted, arbitrators were appointed, and it was ordered that they should make their award within one week. Before the week had expired, and before any award had been made, one of the parties made an ex parte application under s. 373 of the Code for leave to withdraw from the suit with liberty to bring a fresh suit in respect of the same subject-matter. The application was granted, the suit struck off, and a fresh suit instituted in pursuance of the permission thus given by the Court. In defence to this suit, it was pleaded that the suit was barred by s. 21 of the Specific Relief Act (I of 1877). Held, that the Court in the former proceedings had no power to revoke the order of reference prior to award except as provided by s. 510 of the Code; that consequently the Court's order under s. 373 was ultra vires if involving such revocation, or, if not involving it, left the order of reference still in force, that in either alternative the suit was barred by s. 21 of the Specific Relief Act; and that it was immaterial that the period within which the award was to be made expired before the bringing of the second action. Per TYRRELL, J., that the suit was barred by the second clause of s. 373, the Court having had no jurisdiction to pass the order under that section, or, having referred the suit to arbitration, to restore the suit to its file and treat it as awaiting the Court's decision. On the 7th September 1874, V borrowed R5,000 from R N and mortgaged his rights in items 1 and 2 and land of his own to R N. In 1877 R N bought at a sale in execution of a decree against R the share of R in the said items 1 and 2 subject to the mortgage created by R on 5th September 1874, and to another mortgage created by R on 11th January 1875. In 1880 R N sued V and the sons of for arrears of interest due under his mortgage-bond. This suit was withdrawn with liberty to bring a fresh suit for the principal and interest due under the bond. In 1885 R N sued the sons of R and V to recover principal and interest due under his mortgage-bond. Held, that the claim of R N was not barred. VENKATA v. RANGA . I. L. 25. ——— Withdrawal of suit with permission to bring a fresh suit on the same cause of action—Civil Procedure Code, s. 43. Where a suit is withdrawn with permission under the first paragraph of s. 373 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the effect is to leave the parties in the same position as that in which they would have been if the suit had never been brought. A plaintiff, therefore, who has obtained an order under s. 373 of the Code, will not be debarred by s. 43 from claiming in a subsequent suit a relief which he might have included, but did not in the suit which he was permitted to withdraw. Venkata Chetti v. *Ranga Nayak, I. The decree included an order in these terms: "This order will not prevent the plaintiff from instituting a suit for possession of the one-third interest of M L in the fields specified in the deed of sale," upon which the suit was based. No appeal was preferred from this decree. Subsequently the plaintiff brought another suit upon the same title to recover possession of the one-third share referred to in the order just quoted. Held, by the Full Bench, that the Court in the former suit had no power to include in its decree of dismissal any such reservation or order; that the fact that the decree was not appealed against did not give the order contained in it, which was an absolute nullity, any effect. Kudrat v. *Dinu, I. The property sold was the vendor's share as heiress of her father, brother, and sister, who died in 1856, 1866, and 1871, respectively; but it appeared that the property of the family had been in the possession of one managing member since 1856. The plaintiff, during the suit, withdrew his claim against that part of the immoveable property in suit which was within the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court, having compromised with the defendants, who had it in their possession, and pursued his claim against the other immoveable property and obtained a decree. Held, that the withdrawal of the claim with regard to the property situated within the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court (the compromise not having been shown to be otherwise than bonâ fide) did not operate to take away the jurisdiction of the Court to adjudicate on the plaintiff's suit. The suit was filed on the 13th May 1890. The summons was not served on the defendant, but on the 16th May the plaintiff's agent procured his arrest before judgment. On that day he was brought before a Judge of the High Court and was at once discharged. When the case subsequently came on for hearing, the plaintiff applied, under s. 373 of the Civil Procedure Code, for leave to withdraw the suit, with liberty to file a fresh suit on the same cause of action. The defendant's Counsel objected, and claimed either that the plaintiff should continue his suit to a hearing or that the suit should be dismissed with costs, and that compensation for his arrest should be awarded to the defendant under s. 491 of the Civil Procedure Code. The plaintiff contended that, inasmuch as the summons had not been served on him, the defendant was not entitled to appear, and that no compensation could be awarded to him. Held, (i) that inasmuch as the plaintiff had by a legal process brought the defendant before the Court, the defendant had the right to appear at the hearing of the case, although no summons had been served upon him, and that he was entitled to object to the suit being dismissed under Rule of Court No. 64; (ii) that under the circumstances the defendant was entitled to compensation for his arrest under s. 491 of the Code of Civil Procedure; (iii) that the plaintiff might withdraw the suit under s. 373 of the Civil Procedure Code with liberty to bring a fresh suit on payment of the costs incurred by the defendant in the present suit. WITNESS—CIVIL CASES—contd.

1. PERSONS COMPETENT OR NOT TO BE WITNESSES.

1. ——— Arbitrator—Suit after award is set aside. If an arbitration award is set aside and the matter is tried as a suit before the Court, the arbitrator cannot be examined as a witness as to the grounds of his decision, but only to prove any admission which may have been made before him in the course of the arbitration and which might be material evidence. NILMONEE BOSE v. MOHIMA CHUNDER DUTT . 17 W. R. 516

2. ——— Attorney—Advocate—Competent witness. An attorney who has acted as advocate for one of the parties, and pleaded his case in Court, can be examined as a witness in the case. RAMFAL SHAW v. BISWANATH MANDAL 5 B. L. R. Ap. 28

3. ——— Magistrate—Suit for malicious prosecution—Magistrate who held preliminary enquiry into criminal charge. Magistrates are not incapacitated to give evidence of matters which have come before them in the course of a preliminary enquiry into a criminal charge. Held, that in a suit for a malicious prosecution the defendant had a right to the evidence of the Subordinate Magistrate, who held a preliminary enquiry into a charge of forgery preferred by the defendant against the plaintiff. RAMASAMI AYYAN v. RAMU MUPAN . . . 3 Mad. 372

4. ——— Magistrate giving evidence before himself. Where a Judge is the sole Judge of law and fact in a case tried before himself, he cannot give evidence before himself or import matters into his judgment not stated on oath before the Court in the presence of the accused. QUEEN-EMPRESS v. MANIKAM . I. L. R. 19 Mad. 263

5. ——— Munsif—Witness as to facts judicially before him. A Munsif ought not to be called on to depose as to what took place before him in the course of a trial which he was conducting as Munsif, and he is entitled to exemption. ANONYMOUS . . 6 Mad. Ap. 42

6. ——— Person against whom affiliation order is sought—Criminal Procedure Code, 1882, s. 488—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 120—Bastardy proceedings—Maintenance, order of Criminal Court as to. Bastardy proceedings under the provisions of s. 488 of the Criminal Procedure Code are in the nature of civil proceedings within the meaning of s. 120 of the Evidence Act, and the person sought to be charged is a competent witness on his own behalf. NUR MAHOMED v. BISMULLA JAN . I. L. R. 16 Calc. 781

HIRA LAL v. SAHEB JAN I. L. R. 18 All. 107

7. ——— Mamlatdar as assessor under land acquisition proceedings. On a reference to the Collector under the Land Acquisition Act, the Mamlatdar acted as an assessor appointed by the Collector, and was also examined as a witness as to the value of the land. But no objection was taken to his acting as an assessor. The District Judge eventually upheld the Collector's award. On an application under s. 622 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882):—Held, that a person who is appointed an assessor under s. 19 of the Land Acquisition Act (X of 1870) performs quasi-judicial functions, and is therefore incompetent to testify as a witness in the same proceedings. 8. ——— Wife—Evidence of wife to prove non-access—Husband and wife—Presumption of legitimacy — Illegitimacy — Presumption of non-access—Evidence Act (I of 1872), ss. 112 and 118. A wife can be examined as to non-access of her husband during her married life, without independent evidence being first offered to prove the illegitimacy of her children. ROZARIO v. INGLES I. L. R. 18 Bom. 468

9. ——— Child witness—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 118—Witness, competency of—Mode of examination—Competency to be tested before examination as to res gestæ. Before a child of tender years is asked any question bearing on the res gestæ, the Court should test his capacity to understand and give rational answers and his capacity to understand the difference between truth and falsehood. The Judge must form his opinion as to the competency of a witness before his actual examination commences. SHEIKH FAKIR v. EMPEROR (1906) . 11 C. W. N. 51

2. SUMMONING AND ATTENDANCE OF WITNESSES.

1. ——— Duty of Court—Securing attendance of witnesses. Every Court is bound to render all reasonable assistance to a party to enforce the attendance of his witnesses. NILMONEE BANERJEE v. SHURBO MONGOLA DEBEE . 6 W. R. 14

2. ——— Civil Procedure Code, 1882, s. 159. Under s. 159 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), a party to a suit is entitled, as of right, to obtain summonses for his witnesses any time before the day fixed for the disposal of the suit. BAI KALI v. ALARAKH PIRBHAI . . . I. L. R. 15 Bom. 86

3. ——— Application for summons to cite witnesses. A party is entitled at any stage of the case before hearing to apply for a summons to cite witnesses without reference to the number of such applications which he may have previously made, and it is the duty of the Court to comply with such application, if any time be left before the hearing of the cause. 4. ——— Power to summon witnesses —Settlement of issues. Act VIII of 1859 conferred no authority upon a Judge to issue summons to witnesses to attend on the settlement of issues. The written statements must be prepared with great care and deliberation, so as to dispense altogether with parol evidence at the settlement of issues. [The subsequent Codes, however, expressly provide for the attendance of witnesses at the settlement of issues : see s. 159, Civil Procedure Code, 1882.]

5. ——— Discretion of Court to summon witnesses. A Judge's discretion in not compelling the attendance of witnesses named by one of the parties must be exercised on reasonable grounds distinctly stated in the judgment. OZEER MAHOMED v. BYDNATH DOSS CHOWDHRY 5 W. R., Act X, 6

6. ——— Selection of witnesses by Court. It is not right for the lower Court to select five out of twenty witnesses tendered for examination. It is the bounden duty of the Judge to receive all the evidence tendered, unless the object of summoning a large number of witnesses clearly appears to be to impede the adjudication of the case, or otherwise to obstruct the ends of justice. RAMDHAN MANDAL v. RAJBALLAB PARAMANIK 6 B. L. R. Ap. 10

7. ——— Power to refuse to summon witness. A Court has no power to refuse to summon witnesses when expressly requested by a party to do so unless the witnesses are required to be summoned in such a manner, or in such numbers, as clearly indicates a vexatious desire of obstructing the course of justice. RAM PHUL PANDEY v. WAHED ALI KHAN 14 W. R. 66

8. ——— Refusal to summon witnesses—Reasons for refusing application to enforce attendance. It is not incumbent on a Court to give detailed legal reasons for its refusal to comply with an application to enforce the attendance of a party to a suit as a witness. SIDDHESSURREE DEBIA v. DENOBUNDHOO KOONDOO 6 W. R. 65

9. ——— Preliminaries to summoning witness—Materiality of evidence. Before the Court makes an order compelling the attendance of a party to the suit, it must be satisfied that his evidence will be material GOPAL CHUNDER HAZRAH v. MOHESH CHUNDER BANERJEE 21 W. R. 44

10. ——— Summoning plaintiff as witness—Reasons for summons—Duty of Court—Materiality of evidence. A Court is bound, before summoning a plaintiff to give evidence, to record the reasons of its being satisfied that the evidence of the plaintiff is essential to the defendant's case. Where, however, the Court does not give reasons for being satisfied that the presence of the plaintiff is necessary, it does not follow that the defendants had failed to satisfy the Court that there was sufficient ground for the application. MAKOOND ADIT v. SUTTOORGUN ADIT 17 W. R. 507

11. ——— Application to summon witnesses—Witnesses declared unnecessary by Court. Where on a case coming on for hearing before a Court to which it had been remanded, the Judge observed that the evidence of witnesses would be unnecessary, the declaration was held to have sufficiently justified the plaintiffs in making no further application for a summons on their witnesses. RAM JEWUN SINGH v. RADHA PERSHAD SINGH 16 W. R. 109

12. ——— Undertaking to bring witnesses—Practice. On the 12th October 1879 the plaintiff applied to the Court for subpœnas to his witnesses. The Court refused to grant them, on the ground that the plaintiff had himself originally undertaken to bring his witnesses. (The Court had fixed the 28th October 1879 for the final hearing of the plaintiff's case.) Held, that the plaintiff's failure to bring his witnesses was no sufficient reason for depriving him (the plaintiff) of his right to have subpœnas issued, if he found himself unable to bring his witnesses or to detain them till they could be examined, although it might possibly be, under certain circumstances, a reason for not waiting for them, if the plaintiff's case had been in other respects finished before they could be examined. PANDURANG ANPAI v. KESHAVJI JADHAVJI I. L. R. 6 Bom. 742

13. ——— Time for summoning witnesses—Duty of Court. The Civil Procedure Code neither expressly nor impliedly declares that witnesses must be summoned before the day fixed for the first hearing of the suit. So long as the hearing merely stands adjourned, and so long as the party who wishes to summon witnesses has not closed his case, the Court is bound to summon them, unless it appears that the application is made so late that the witnesses cannot be reasonably expected to attend in time to be examined before that party's case closes. party—Delay in giving names of intended witnesses. Where an appellant delayed to give in the names of his witnesses, but would yet have been within reasonable time to secure their attendance on the day of hearing if summonses had been sent through different peons by the railway :—Held, that the lower Appellate Court was bound to have directed the issue of the summonses, and to have given every assistance to the party asking for them, all additional expenses being paid by such party. PEAREE MOHUN MOOKERJEE v. MADHUB CHUNDER GHOSAL 9 W. R. 489

15. ——— Omission of proper steps to obtain attendance of witnesses. Where some of the witnesses (defendants) in a suit had been examined, and plaintiff petitioned the Court to have the remaining defendants examined as witnesses, he was held not to have taken the necessary steps required by law to enforce their attendance, because he did not make any special application to the Court, or show sufficient grounds in support of his petition. RAM TUHUL THAKOOR v. OODIT NARAIN SINGH . . . 12 W. R. 36

16. ——— Procedure under Dekkhan Agriculturists' Act (XVII of 1879), s. 7—Right of defendant to call witnesses. The plaintiff sued, under s. 3, cl. (w), of Act XVII of 1879 for money due on a bond dated the 8th September, 1877. The defendant, though duly summoned, did not appear on the day fixed in the summons, which was for the final disposal of the suit. The Court therefore proceeded with it ex parte. The defendant, being subsequently summoned and examined as a witness under s. 7 of the Act, admitted the bond sued upon, but pleaded part payment of the plaintiff's claim. He then applied to the Court that his witnesses should be summoned, and that their evidence be taken in support of his allegation. The Subordinate Judge was of opinion that he (defendant) was not entitled to offer the evidence. On his referring the case to the High Court :—Held, that it was his duty to summon the witnesses named by the defendant. DULICHAND v. DHONDI I. L. R. 5 Bom. 184

17. ——— Civil Procedure Code, 1877, s. 137—Summons to produce documents. In all cases in which parties apply for a summons to compel the attendance of witnesses, or a summons to produce documents, or apply to have a document sent for under s. 137 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the Court ought not to refuse such application, merely because in its opinion the witnesses cannot be present, or the documents cannot be produced, before the termination of the trial. KRISHNA CHURN BAISACK v PROTAB CHUNDER SURMA I. L. R. 7 Calc. 560

18. ——— Adjournment for attendance of witnesses—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 156—Discretion, exercise of—Witnesses, Attendance of—Power of High Court on second appeal. On the day fixed for the hearing of a suit, the defendant applied for process against certain of his witnesses who had been summoned, but had who failed to attend, asking for an adjournment to obtain their attendance. This application was refused and the case was proceeded with. The plaintiffs' evidence was recorded and that of one of the defendants ; the defendants being unable to produce further evidence, the Court recorded that the case was closed, and that judgment would be delivered on the following day, the 31st December. On the day following the defendants produced certain witnesses and asked that they might be examined. This application was rejected, and judgment was subsequently delivered in favour of the plaintiffs. Held per PETHERAM, C.J., that the omission to examine the defendants' witnesses on the 31st December was a substantial error in procedure, and that the Munsif had therefore exercised his discretion wrongfully. Per GHOSE, J.—That although there was some doubt whether the Court on second appeal could interfere in a point of discretion, yet this doubt was not strong enough to justify an expression of opinion contrary to that arrived at by the Chief Justice. 19. ——— Civil Procedure Code, 1882, s. 159—Application to summon witnesses—Duty of Court in respect of such application. Where a person making an application to a Civil Court for witnesses to be summoned has negligently or with intention to delay the hearing postponed the making of his application for a summons until a time when it would be impossible to obtain the attendance of the witnesses at the hearing, the Court might properly refuse to adjourn the hearing, but nevertheless it would be the duty of the Court to order the summons asked for the issue, as the Court is not given a discretion under s. 159 of the Code of Civil Procedure enabling it to refuse such an application. Krishna Churn Baisack v. *Protab Chunder Surma, I. 22. ——— Power to dismiss suit—Dismissal of suit on ground of there not being time after filing of list to summon witnesses—Civil Procedure Code, 1859, s. 149; 1877, s. 159. The 20th of March 1877 having been fixed for the final hearing of a suit, the plaintiff on the 17th of March, and the defendant on the 19th filed their list of witnesses to be summoned. Both lists were ordered merely to be put up with the record. When the suits came on for hearing, it was dismissed on the ground that, when the plaintiff filed his list, there was not sufficient time left to summon the witnesses. Held, that the Judge was not justified in dismissing the suit on this ground, unless he found that it would have been absolutely impossible to secure the attendance of the witnesses had the summonses been granted on the 17th instant. 4. DEFAULTING WITNESSES.

1. ——— Non-attendance of witnesses on summons—Duty of parties—Commission. When witnesses do not appear after service of summons, it is the duty of the party requiring their evidence, and not of the Court, to move for further measures to be taken to secure their attendance; and when a commission is issued for the examination of witnesses, the Court must be moved to wait for the return. NUND MOHUN CHOWDHRY v. GOLUCK NATH NEOGEE . . 11 W. R. 99

2. ——— Duty of parties—Issue of attachment—Civil Procedure Code, 1859, s. 168. Where witnesses do not appear on summons, it is for the parties to move the Court, not for the Court to proceed, suo motu, to further the production of the witnesses, though the Court may issue attachment under s. 168, Code of Civil Procedure, if it is shown that the witnesses are absconding or keeping out of the way. 5. ——— Witness making default in appearing—Civil Procedure Code, 1859, s. 168—Ground for issue of warrant. S. 168 of the Civil Procedure Code required that there should appear to the Court to be satisfactory ground for believing that the default on the part of witnesses summoned to give evidence was without lawful excuse before issuing a warrant for the arrest of such witnesses. But it was not necessary for this purpose to institute a formal investigation and come to a determination on the evidence adduced. PERIYANNA CHETTY v. GOVINDA GOUNDEN 5 Mad. 104

6. ——— Issue of proclamation against absent witness—Materiality of evidence—Ground for non-attendance. A Court was held to be not bound to issue a proclamation against absent witnesses in a case where it was not satisfied that the witnesses were material, or that they had really absconded to avoid attendance. He attended the Court, but did not produce the document, stating on oath that it was not in his possession. But this statement was disbelieved, and the Court fined him R75 under s. 174 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Held, that the fine was illegally levied. The jurisdiction of the Court to punish under s. 174 of the Civil Procedure Code exists only in the case of a witness who, not having attended on summons, has been arrested and brought before the Court. Where a Court of first instance, considering it unnecessary to examine certain witnesses for the defence, dismissed the suit, and the lower Appellate Court, disbelieving the evidence of those witnesses for the defence who were examined, allowed the plaintiff's appeal:—Held, that, before doing so, the lower Appellate Court should have afforded the defendants an opportunity of supplementing the evidence which they had given in the first Court by the testimony of those witnesses whom that Court had declared it unecessary to hear, and that the case must be regarded as one in which the first Court had refused to examine the witnesses tendered by the defendants. The Court directed the first Court to examine the defendants' witnesses, and, having done so, to return their depositions to the lower Appellate Court, which was to replace the appeal upon its file and dispose of it. (a) GENERALLY.

1. ——— Selection of witness—Duty of parties. It is not the business of a Court to determine what witnesses shall be examined. 7. ——— Additional witnesses to facts already in evidence—Tender of large number of witnesses—Ground for remand. In a suit for possession of zamindari and other estates claimed by the plaintiff as son and heir of the deceased zamindar, the defendants denied the title of the plaintiff, alleging that he was a spurious and suppositious child and tendered fifty-eight witnesses to prove that fact. The Zillah Court, having taken the depositions of thirty of these witnesses, refused to permit the remaining twenty-eight to be examined, on the ground that, as they were going to prove the facts deposed to by those already examined, it was unnecessary to take their depositions, and ultimately decided in favour of the plaintiff. The defendants appealed to the Sudder Court, which refused to examine the witnesses rejected by the Zillah Court, and affirmed the decree of that Court. On appeal to Her Majesty in Council, the Judicial Committee remitted the case back to the Sudder Court, being of opinion that the refusal by that Court to permit the examination of the witnesses tendered was irregular, and that no decision could be come to upon the merits under such circumstances. But where no objection was urged during the trial, or until an appeal was interposed, the Judicial Committee held that the objection came too late and could not be sustained, as, notwithstanding such irregularity and miscarriage, that fact did not taint the whole proceedings so as to prevent the plaintiff recovering upon the other evidence which was sufficient to establish his case. 7. CONSIDERATION AND WEIGHT OF EVIDENCE.

1. ——— Credibility of witnesses—Power to set aside decision on evidence. The credibility of witnesses is a matter altogether for the Court of first instance and the Court which hears a regular appeal; and if these Courts are satisfied that the witnesses are not to be believed, their decision cannot be set aside by the High Court on special appeal, even though upon a general view of the case it should think that, if it had tried the case originally, it might have come to a different conclusion. GOUREE PERSHAD KOONDOO v. PRANNATH SURMAH . . . 10 W. R. 365

2. ——— Mode of testing credibility—Several witnesses to same facts. In examining evidence with a view to test whether several witnesses who bear testimony to the same facts are worthy of credit, it is important to see whether they give their evidence in the same words, or whether they subtantially agree, not, indeed, concurring in all the minute particulars of what passed, but with that agreement in substance, and that variation in unimportant details, which are usually found in witnesses intending to speak the truth, and not tutored to tell a particular story. NANA NARAIN RAO v. HARREE PUNTH BHAO Marsh. 436 : 9 Moo. I. A. 96

3. ——— Witnesses called to support case giving evidence contrary to it. A party who calls a witness to give evidence on his behalf is not necessarily bound by his evidence; but if the evidence is at variance with the truth of his case (e.g., if a witness called to prove execution of a document swears that it was not executed and has the means of knowing the fact), it throws a suspicion on the case which renders the clearest testimony necessary to establish its truth. FUZEELUN BEEBEE v. OMDAH BEEBEE 10 W. R. 469

4. ——— Credit on other matters of witnesses supporting a false case. Although it does not necessarily follow that where a witness gives evidence on a particular fact in a case and that fact is found against his evidence, he is to be entirely disbelieved on the other parts of the case he has spoken to, yet where witnesses who were not merely giving an opinion upon an isolated fact in the case, but came into Court to prove the whole case made by the plaintiffs, and that a very special case and it is shown to be a case false in its material features, much reliance cannot be placed on their evidence as to any particular questions in the case. HABEEBOOLLAH v. GOUHUR ALLY KHAN . . . . 18 W. R. P. C. 523

5. ——— Ground for refusal to consider evidence—Non-production of best evidence. The principle that a plaintiff is bound to produce the best evidence in his power was held not to justify a Judge in omitting to consider the weight and legal effect of the remaining witnesses, when plaintiff had failed to produce the most important witness. 9. ——— Rejection of evidence unnecessarily and unjustifiably. Held, by NORMAN, J., that the Judge was not at liberty to reject, as matters which he could wholly leave out of consideration, any of the evidence before him in a case where the witnesses were unimpeached in their general character and uncontradicted by any testimony on the other side, and where there was no improbability in the facts which they related, and that the probative force arising from concurrent testimony was the compound ratio of the probabilities of the testimonies taken singly. RADHA KANT DEB v. KHEMA DOSSEE 7 W. R. 105

10. ——— Evidence of witnesses found unreliable in criminal case. A Judge was held to have done wrong in throwing out the evidence of witnesses tendered by the defendant in a civil action, merely because they have been found untrustworthy when examined with reference to a charge of breach of trust against the same defendant in a criminal case. 13. ——— Evidence of truth of witness. The observation that the evidence of a witness proves too much is not rebutted by the suggestion that it cannot be supposed that the witness was suborned, for, if he was possessed of common shrewdness, he would not have overdone the thing and then have given rise to such an objection. 14. ——— Credibility of witnesses—Professional witness—Witnesses in former cases. The Privy Council, referring to the generality of the Principal Sudder Ameen's observations as to certain witnesses having given evidence in other cases, observed that, though it was a legitimate objection to a man's credit that he was a professional witness, yet to state broadly and generally that a witness has given evidence in other cases, and therefore became unworthy of credit, could only tend to increase the indisposition of respectable persons to come into Court as witnesses, which was one of the social evils of India. LALL BEHAREE LALL v. GOPEE BEEBEE 18 W. R. P. C. 285

15. ——— Discrepancies in statements of witnesses. Discrepancies in an account of what took place in a conversation are not a sufficient ground for disbelieving statements made by different witnesses. BHAJU SING v. KAIFNATH TEWARI . . . 3 B. L. R. A. C. 332

17. ——— Findings of fact by first Court, upset by Appellate Court—Credibility of witnesses—Witness proving hostile ; refusal by Court of permission to cross-examine, effect of—Documentary evidence, direct and indirect, in respect of business transactions, relative value. A case in which the Appellate Courts questioned the credibility of witnesses relied upon the Court of first instance, and upset the findings of fact of such Court upon the evidence on record. When one's own witness unexpectedly makes statements adverse to his interest, it is common fairness that the Judge should permit such statements to be tested by cross-examination, if the evidence is to be relied upon ; and if cross-examination be disallowed the evidence is of the value. J, a trader in Calcutta of no solvency, had obtained goods from Y, a trader in Madras, and dishonoured all his hundies except one, and transferred the goods to one K. Y, unable to obtain payment from J, sent down his gomasta B to realize the amount, and the latter, alleging non-payment on the part of J and fraudulent, transfer of goods to K, took insolvency proceedings against J, at which, in spite of J's plea of payment to B and evidence by him and K to that effect, J was declared an insolvent. Later on, B on behalf of Y presented a further petition for a declaration that the transfer of goods to K was fraudulent and void as against the Official Assignee, and praying that K be ordered to return the goods to him or pay the proceeds. K, who had hitherto not been a party, set up the bonâ fides of the transfer and the alleged payment by J to B in full settlement of Y's claim. Further evidence was given in support of the plea, and amongst other evidence documentary evidence, such as receipts, account-books and promissory notes was produced to show the transfer, receipt and endorsement and cashing of certain currency notes of large value to prove the alleged payment by J and settlement with B. Held, on evidence, that K's plea failed, and, further, as it appeared that as between J and other persons transactions apparently were carried on in a business-like manner, but none with B, although he had taken insolvency proceedings against J, and, as no settlement of claim in writing, no receipts of alleged payments to B or endorsement by him on the currency notes alleged to have been changed by him was forthcoming, the story of K was all the more incredible. 3. ——— Right of suit—Slander—Slander uttered by witness whilst under examination in a judicial proceeding. A witness in a Court of justice is absolutely privileged as to anything he may say as a witness having reference to the enquiry on which he is called as a witness. The plaintiff sued to recover damages for slander, the statement complained of being alleged in the plaint to have been made by the defendant while being examined as a witness during the hearing of a case before a Magistrate. It was found that the statement was made in answer to questions put to the defendant as a witness and allowed by the Court as relevant to the case. The plaintiff alleged that the statement was made maliciously, that the defendant bore him a grudge, and that it was to give vent to that grudge and to injure his reputation that the statement was made. Held, that the plaint disclosed no cause of action, and that the suit has been properly dismissed. After plaintiff's evidence had been concluded, in which he stated that there was no enmity between him and defendant. The defendant was examined by the Court, and stated that there was enmity between him and the plaintiff, and on the Court inquiring to know what was the cause of enmity, defendant used words conveying the meaning that plaintiff's descent was illegitimate. Held, by BRODHURST, J. that under the circumstances the statement complained of was made by defendant while deposing in the witness-box, and therefore absolutely privileged. Per MAHMOOD, J. (contra), that the question whether or not the statement complained of was made by defendant in course of his deposition, or after it was finished, and when he was no longer in the witness-box, had not been tried, and the order remanding the case for trial on the merits was right. Further, that the English law of slander as forming part of the law of defamation, and as such drawing somewhat arbitrary distinctions between words actionable per se and words requiring proof of special or actual damage, is not applicable to this country, either by reason of any statutory provision or by any uniform course of decision sufficient to establish such distinctions as part of the common law of British India ; that whilst the English law of defamation recognizes no distinction between defamation as such and personal insult in civil liability, the law of British India recognizes personal insult conveyed by abusive language as actionable per se without proof of special or actual damage ; that such abusive and insulting language, unless excused or protected by any other rule of law, is in itself a substantive cause of action and a civil injury, apart from defamation, and that malice is an element of liability for abusive and insulting language, and that such malice will be presumed or inferred, unless the contrary is shown ; that when the defendant is absolutely privileged and protected by reason of the office or occasion on which he employed such language, he renders himself subject to a civil liability for damage, irrespective of any plea of justification based upon proving the truth of the statements contained in the abusive and insulting language complained of ; that the rule of English law as to the privilege or protection of a witness in regard to defamatory statements made in the witness-box is based upon a public policy which is equally applicable to insulting and abusive language used by such witness ; and such statements when made in the witness-box are privileged and protected, even though made maliciously and falsely, so long as they are relevant to the inquiry in the broadest sense of the phrase ; and that, even where such statements have no reference to the inquiry, the defendant may prove the absence of malice, and that they were made in good faith for the public good. 1. PERSONS COMPETENT OR NOT TO BE WITNESSES.

1. ——— Judge—Competent witness. A Judge is a competent witness, and can give evidence in a case being tried before himself, even though he laid the complaint, acting as a public officer, provided that he has no personal or pecuniary interest in the subject of the charge and he is not precluded thereby from dealing judicially with the evidence of which his own forms a part. 2. ——— Magistrate— Evidence Act, s. 121—Power of Sessions Judge to compel Magistrate to give evidence—Privilege of witness. A Sessions Judge finding, in the course of a trial, as regards the examination of the accused person taken by the committing Subordinate Magistrate, that the provisions of s. 346 of Act X of 1872 had not been fully complied with, summoned the committing Magistrate and took his evidence that the accused person duly made the statement recorded. The Magistrate of the district objected to this proceeding of the Sessions Judge, contending that it was "contrary to law." The Sessions Judge referred the question, whether or not his proceeding was contrary to law, to the High Court. Per STUART, C. J., PEARSON, J., OLDFIELD, J., and STRAIGHT, J. That the privilege given by s. 121 of Act I of 1872 is the privilege of the witness, i.e., of the Judge or Magistrate of whom the question is asked: if he waives such privilege, or does not object to answer such question, it does not lie in the mouth of any other person to assert the privilege: the reference, the objection not having been taken by the Subordinate Magistrate, but the Magistrate of the District, should be answered accordingly.

3. ——— Judge trying case—Magistrate witness of facts. In a case in which a Deputy Magistrate took an active part in the capture of parties charged with having been members of an unlawful assembly,—parties whom he himself tried on that charge,—it was held that he was bound to state to the accused, so far as he could, what were the facts he himself observed, and to which he himself could bear testimony, and the prisoner in such situation had a right, if he thought it desirable, to cross-examine the Judge, whose evidence should be recorded, and form part of the record in the case. The proper course, however, for the Deputy Magistrate to have taken in this case would have been to decline to try the case, and to ask that it should be undertaken by some other Judge. In the matter of the petition of HURRO CHUNDER PAUL

13. ——— Competency of persons of tender years—Evidence Act s. 118. The competency of a person to testify as a witness is a condition precedent to the administration to him of an oath or affirmation, and is a question distinct from that of his credibility when he has been sworn or has affirmed. In determining the question of competency, the Court, under s. 118 of the Evidence Act, has not to enter into enquiries as to the witness's religious belief, or as to his knowledge of the consequences of falsehood in this world or the next. It has to ascertain in the best way it can, whether, from the extent of his intellectual capacity and understanding, he is able to give a rational account of what he has seen or heard or done on a particular occasion. If a person of tender years or of very advanced age can satisfy these requirements, his competency as a witness is established. QUEEN-EMPRESS v. LAL SAHAI.

The accused then applied for further time for the appearance of the witnesses. This the Magistrate refused to grant, and convicted the accused. Held per JACKSON, J., that this being a warrant case, it was the duty of the Magistrate to summon the witnesses that might be offered by the accused, and that he might at his discretion have adjourned the case. Held, further, per JACKSON, J., that the meaning of s. 359 of the Criminal Procedure Code is, that if among the persons named by the accused as witnesses, the Magistrate considers that any witness is included for the purpose of vexation and delay, he is to exercise his judgment and enquire whether such witness is material; but that the section is not intended to enable the Magistrate to enquire into what the defence of the accused person is to be and to consider whether, on learning the nature of the defence, he is absolutely to abstain from summoning the whole of the witnesses cited by the accused; and further, that in the present case there was not any purpose of vexation or delay, and that by the refusal to grant further time the accused had been probably prejudiced in their defence. 28. ——— Criminal Procedure Code, 1872, s. 359—Witness for the defence—Failure to attend—Refusal to re-summon. On the 30th March 1881 an accused person on his trial before a Magistrate asked that a certain witness might be summoned on his behalf. The Magistrate ordered a summons to be issued for the attendance of such witness on the 18th April, to which day the further hearing of the case was adjourned. There was some delay in the service of the summons, and such witness did not attend on that day. The Magistrate refused an application by the accused for the issue of a second summons to such witness, with reference to s. 359 of Act X of 1872, on the ground that such application was not made in "good faith." Held, that the provisions of s. 359 of Act X of 1872 were clearly inapplicable to the case as it stood before the Magistrate on the 18th April, and he was bound to make a further attempt—the first attempt seemed to have been nominal merely—to secure the attendance of the absent witness. 29. ——— Witness for defence—Refusal by Magistrate to summon witness under Criminal Procedure Code, 1882, s. 216—Witness summoned by Sessions Court—Criminal Procedure Code, 1882, ss. 291, 540. Under the committal of certain persons for trial before the Sessions Court for offences under the Penal Code, each of the prisoners, under s. 211 of the Criminal Procedure Code, gave in a written list of the persons whom he wished to be summoned to give evidence at the trial. On each of these lists the name of a particular person was entered, who objected under s. 216 to being summoned, on the ground that the summons was desired for vexatious purposes only, and that there were no reasonable grounds for believing that any evidence he could give would be material. Upon this objection, the committing Magistrate passed an order requiring the prisoners to satisfy him that there were reasonable grounds for believing that the objector's evidence was material, and, having heard arguments on both sides, passed an order refusing to issue the summons. The only ground stated by the Magistrate for this order was that he thought the reasons assigned for the application to have the objector summoned were insufficient. Subsequent to the order, and before the trial in the Sessions Court had begun, the Sessions Judge, upon an application filed on behalf of the prisoner, passed an order directing that the objector should be summoned to give evidence. The order assigned no reasons, and was passed in the absence of the objector or of any person representing him, and without notice to show cause being issued to him. The objector applied to the High Court for revision of the order on the ground that the Sessions Judge had no jurisdiction to make it. Held, that when a Magistrate refuses, under s. 216 of the Criminal Procedure Code, to summon a witness included in the list of the accused, he must record his reasons for such refusal, and such reasons must show that the evidence of such witness is not material; that the ground stated by the Magistrate, viz., that the reasons assigned for the application to have the objector summoned were insufficient, did not show that the evidence was not material; that the Sessions Judge had jurisdiction to make the order complained of; and that, even if he had not, it would not, under the circumstances, be desirable to interfere with his order in revision. Per STRAIGHT, J., that s. 540 is not the only provision of the Criminal Procedure Code which confers on a Sessions Judge powers of the kind exercised by him in this case. Under s. 291, though the summoning of witnesses by an accused through the medium of the Sessions Judge is not a matter of right, yet the Judge has an inherent power, if he thinks proper to exercise it, to sanction the summoning of other witnesses than those named in the list delivered to the committing Magistrate. In the matter of the petition of the RAJAH OF KANTIT.

The Public Prosecutor is not bound to call any witnesses who will not, in his opinion, speak the truth or support the points he desires to establish by their evidence; but in such circumstances he should explain to the Court that this is his reason for not calling those witnesses, and he should offer to put them in the box for cross-examination by the accused at their discretion. A medical man who has not seen the corpse is only in a position to give evidence of his opinion as an expert. The proper mode of eliciting such evidence is to put to the witness hypothetically the facts which the evidence of the other witnesses attempts to prove, and to ask the witness's opinion on those facts. S. 323 of Act X of 1872 did not in any way preclude the Judge at a Sessions trial from calling and examining the medical witness who had been examined before the Magistrate, and in every case in which the deposition taken by the Magistrate is essentially deficient or requires further elucidation, such witness should be called and examined by the Sessions Judge. (b) EXAMINATION BY COURT.

43. ——— Examination of witness by Judge—Evidence Act, s. 138—Duty of Court in examining witnesses. At a trial before a Sessions Court, the Judge on the examination-in-chief of the witnesses for the prosecution being finished, questioned the witnesses at considerable length upon the points to which he must have known that the cross-examination would certainly and properly be directed. Held, that such a course of procedure was irregular and opposed to the provisions of s. 138 of the Evidence Act. It is not the province of the Court to examine the witnesses, unless the pleaders on either side have omitted to put some material question or questions; and the Court should, as a general rule, leave the witnesses to the pleaders to be dealt with as laid down in s. 138 of the Act. Before the witness appeared, the accused asked the Court to countermand the order for his attendance, but the Court refused to do so. When the witness attended, the accused declined to examine him. He was thereupon examined by the Court; and, upon the accused claiming the right to cross-examine the witness, the Court refused to allow him to do so. Held, that, under the circumstances, the witness could not be regarded as a witness for the defence, and that the accused should have been given an opportunity to cross-examine him. 46. ——— Right of accused to cross-examine witnesses, for the prosecution before commitment—Criminal Procedure Code, 1861, s. 194; (Act X of 1872) s. 191; (Act X of 1882) ss. 210, 256, 257 and 288. An accused person has the right to cross-examine the witnesses for the prosecution after their examination at the judicial inquiry before the Magistrate previous to commitment. The fact that the Criminal Procedure Code of 1872 contained an express provision to that effect, which was omitted in the Code of 1882, together with the provision of ss. 210 and 256 of the latter Code, must not be taken to show an intention on the part of the Legislature to deprive an accused of that right. The express provision in the Code of 1872 was probably thought by the Legislature, when framing the Code of 1882, as being redundant, seeing that the Evidence Act of 1872, which was passed at the same time as the Criminal Procedure Code of 1872, made sufficient provision on the subject. S. 256, moreover, does not prohibit cross-examination before a charge is framed; it permits a further cross-examination expressly directed to the case found and embodied in the charge, and would enable an accused person, if he has reserved his cross-examination, to exercise his right at that time, subject to a discretion given to the Magistrate by s. 257. Where depositions of witnesses for the prosecution before the Magistrate previous to commitment were taken without any cross-examination by the accused being allowed, it was held that such depositions were improperly treated as evidence in the Sessions Court, as they had not been "duly taken" in the presence of the accused withn the meaning of s. 288 of the Code. After a charge has been drawn up, it is the duty of the Magistrate to require the accused to state whether he wishes to cross-examine, and, if so, which of the witnesses for the prosecution whose evidence has been taken. The fact that there has been already some cross-examination beofre the charge has been drawn up does not affect this privilege. The police officer investigating the case sent him to the Sub-divisional Magistrate, who, considering the case as one of suspicion only, released the accused on bail. After the post mortem, the investigation was renewed, and three days after the release of the accused the police officer sent a number of witnesses to an Honorary Magistrate, not having jurisdiction to try the case, to have their statements recorded under s. 164 of the Criminal Procedure Code, on the ground that there was every chance of their being gained over. Their statements as also that of the accused, were recorded by that Magistrate. Held, that the police officer had no authority to place the witnesses before the Honorary Magistrate, as they did not appear voluntarily. Held, also, that the Honorary Magistrate, being a member of an independent Bench exercising third-class powers, could not, unless he was specially authorised, act independently, that is to say, when not sitting on the Bench. Held, further, that the object of s. 162 of the Criminal Procedure Code would be defeated if, while a police-officer cannot himself record any statement made to him by a person under examination, he can do so by causing the persons to appear before a local Magistrate not competent to deal with the case, and get their statements recorded by him. If the police officer had reason to believe that the witnesses were likely to be gained over by the accused or his party, the police officer should have sent in the accused and the witnesses to the Magistrate having jurisdiction, without delay EMPEROR v. NURI SHEIKH (1902).

2. ——— ——— Statement of witness taken by the police during investigation and recorded in the special diary—Copies of such statements when to be given to the accused—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 161 and 162—Practice. Where the trying Magistrate, at the instance of the accused, called for the statements of certain prosecution witnesses recorded by the police during their investigation in the special diary and then returned them to the police without recording an order that he did not think it expedient in the interests of justice to furnish the accused with a copy and also disallowed an application to summon a defence witness:—Held, that the Sessions Judge should re-hear the appeal and examine this witness, and send for the statements recorded by the police and, if he found anything in them of advantage to the accused, that he should also summon the witnesses who made them and allow cross-examination after supplying the accused with a copy of their statements. 1. ———— Form and contents of written statement—Civil Procedure Code, 1859, s. 123—Defendant's written statement—Variance between pleading and proof. S. 123 of the Civil Procedure Code, contemplated that a defendant should, in his written statement, set forth the case he intends to make at the trial. The rule followed in Eshenchunder Singh v. Shamachurn Bhutto, 11 Moo. I. A. 7; Mohummud Zahoor Ali Khan v. Rutta Koer, 11 Moo. I. A. 468; and Narainee Dossee v. Nurrohurry Mohuto, Marsh. 70, that a plaintiff must be held to the state of facts and equities alleged and pleaded by him in his plaint, or involved in or consistent therewith, applies also to the case made on the pleadings by a defendant. Therefore, where the defendant in a suit in ejectment averred in his written statement that the land in dispute was in fact his, but had previously to 1865 been encroached on by the plaintiff, who, in 1865, was about to erect a building thereon, and that the defendant then, in order to avoid litigation, compromised the dispute by payment to the plaintiff of a sum of money, and purchased the land, and had since then remained in possession of it:—Held, that the only defence open to the defendant was that of purchase, and that he could not be allowed at the trial to prove a case of continuous user and possession adverse to the plaintiff commencing before 1865. 5. ——— Taking off the file for irrelevancy—Relevant matter—Tender of written statement. The Court has jurisdiction to take a written statement off the file, for irrelevancy until it is "tendered," which is when it is produced at the hearing of the suit. "Relevancy" is to be judged by what the defendant believed to be material to his case, and not whether it did in fact disclose a good defence to the action. The testator died shortly afterwards. It was found that the plaintiff's natural father was aware of the dispositions contained in the will, and that the testator would not have adopted the plaintiff but for the consent of the natural father to those dispositions. The defendants who claimed under gift from the wife had denied the adoption in their written statement, and on appeal raised the further plea that the adoption, if any, was conditional on the provisions of the will being acquiesced in. Held, that the defendants were not precluded from succeeding on the latter of these pleas notwithstanding it was inconsistent with their written statement. Mahomed Buksh Khan v. *Hoseini Bibi, I. 9. ——— Verification on behalf of Corporation—Principal officer of Corporation or Company—Civil Procedure Code, 1882, ss. 115 and 235—Practice—Waiver of objection to verification—Plaint, verification of. The Civil Procedure Code by ss. 115 and 435 enables a principal officer of a corporation to verify a plaint or written statement, and it is therefore not necessary that permission for that purpose should be obtained, but it should be shown in cases to which s. 435 applies that the person purporting to verify a plaint or a written statement on behalf of a Corporation or Company is a principal officer of the Corporation, and is able to depose to the facts of the case. If the plaint or written statement contains a statement to that effect, verification in the usual form would probably be sufficient. Where suits had been filed against the East Indian Railway Company, the plaints in which described the defendant Company as a Corporation, and an application was made for the admission on behalf of the defendant Company of written statements signed. "The East Indian Railway Company by their constituted attorney and agent Richard Gardiner," who was described in the verification as the "Agent of the defendant Company," and the written statements contained no statement to the effect that he was a principal officer of the defendant Company and able to depose to the facts of the case:—Held, that such evidence should be supplied by affidavit before the written statements could be admitted. The provisions in the Code relating to the verification of written statement, however, being intended for the protection of plaintiffs, the ir observance might be waived by the plaintiffs, and if they were prepared to waive objections to the sufficiency of the verification, further evidence of the nature indicated might be dispensed with. He may do so if he likes. S. 146 of the Civil Procedure Code contemplates that issues may be settled whether there was a written statement or not, though it is not obligatory on the Court to frame issues if the defendant makes no defence. Where a written statement filed on behalf of the defendant was actually received by the Court and no application was made by the plaintiff to have it taken off the file on the ground of its not being signed and verified by the defendant as required by s. 115 of the Civil Procedure Code, and the question was raised for the first time in appeal after the case had been fought on in the first Court on the footing of a proper written statement. Held, that in such circumstances the appellate Court was not justified in decreeing the suit on the footing that there was no defence, by reason of the written statement not being signed or verified by the defendant, and the case should have been tried on the merits. Ap. 24

6. ——— Wrongful restraint—Penal Code, ss. 339, 340, 342—Malice. Malice is not an essential ingredient in the offence of "wrongful confinement" as defined by s. 340 of the Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860). The offence is complete when a person is wrongfully restrained in such a manner as to be prevented from proceeding beyond certain circumscribing limits. And a person is wrongfully restrained when he is voluntarily obstructed so as to be prevented from proceeding in any direction in which he has a right to proceed. The accused as abkari inspector visited a toddy shop where the complainant and one D were employed as agents for the sale of toddy. Having reason to suspect that an offence under the Abkari Act (Bombay Act V of 1878) had been committed, the accused made an inquiry, in the course of which the complainant made certain statements implicating his fellow-servant. The accused thereupon resolved to prosecute D and make the complainant a witness in the case. In order to prevent him being tutored, the accused ordered his sepoy to bring the complainant to his camp, and there detained him during the night, and on the following morning sent him in charge of a sepoy to a Magistrate's Court, where the complainant repeated the statements made by him before the accused. He was then allowed to go away. The accused prosecuted D, and in the course of his trial admitted in his deposition that he had ordered his sepoy to bring the complainant to his camp, and had detained him there during the night. After the termination of D's trial, the complainant charged the accused with wrongful confinement under s. 342 of the Indian Penal Code. The accused pleaded that the complainant had voluntarily come to his tent to have his statements reduced to writing, and that he had of his own accord stopped in his camp during the night. The trying Magistrate held this plea proved, and discharged the accused under s. 253 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1882). The Sessions Judge held that, though the accused had detained the complainant in his camp during the night, still he was not guilty of any offence under the Penal Code, as he had acted without malice and to the best of his judgment. Held, by the High Court on revision, that the mere circumstance that the accused had acted without malice and to the best of his judgment did not protect him, if his act otherwise satisfied the definition of s. 340 of the Indian Penal Code. A complaint was filed against him in the Sangli State, charging him with committing breach of trust within the territories of that State. Thereupon he obtained an order from the District Magistrate of Belgaum, dated the 15th November 1891, which exempted him from arrest for the offence of criminal breach of trust without a warrant issued by himself or by the Political Agent of the Southern Maratha country. This order was communicated to M through the accused, who was the chief constable at Belgaum. On the 27th November 1891 a police officer from Sangli State came to Belgaum with a warrant issued by the Sangli Court for the arrest of M on a charge of criminal breach of trust. The chief constable thereupon directed M's arrest. M brought to the notice of the chief constable the District Magistrate's order of the 15th November 1891, but he was detained in custody till the matter was reported to the first class Magistrate, who ordered his discharge. In the meantime the complaint filed against M in the Sangli State was dismissed without requiring his extradition. M thereupon prosecuted the chief constable on a charge of wrongful arrest and wrongful confinement. Held, that the chief constable had no power to arrest the complainant without a warrant and that he was guilty of the offence of wrongful confinement under s. 342 of the Penal Code. In re MUKUND BABU VETHE I. His turn of duty lasted from 4 to 7 A. M. Between 6-30 and 7 A.M. he saw the complainant carrying under his arm three pieces of cloth. Suspecting that the cloth was stolen property, he went up to the complainant and questioned him. In answer to one of the questions the complainant stated that the cloth was made in England. The accused, noticing that each piece bore Gujarathi marks and not knowing that such marks are placed on English-made goods, concluded that this statement was false, and that the cloth had been stolen. He took hold of one of the pieces of cloth in order to examine it more closely. The complainant objected to this, and there was a scuffle between them for the possession of the cloth. The accused then arrested the complainant, and took him to a European Inspector, to whom he stated the facts, alleging that he had arrested the complainant because he had assaulted him. The Inspector, seeing that the complainant was an old man, and on the accused saying he was not hurt, let the complainant go. The complainant then lodged a complaint before the acting Chief Presidency Magistrate charging the accused with wrongful restraint and wrongful confinement, offences punishable under ss. 341 and 342, respectively, of the Indian Penal Code (XLV of 1860). The defence was that the complainant had assaulted the accused, and had been on that account arrested and kept in confinement until released by the Inspector of Police. The Magistrate found that there was no justification for the suspicion which the accused professed to entertain ; that there were no reasonable grounds for questioning the complainant about the cloth in his possession, and that the scuffle was caused solely by the action of the accused in treating the complainant without any valid reason as a suspected thief. The Magistrate convicted the accused of wrongful confinement under s. 342 of the Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), and sentenced him to four months' rigorous imprisonment. Held, by the High Court, that the conviction was wrong. The accused having, under the circumstances of the case, an honest suspicion that the cloth in the possession of the complainant was stolen property, was justified in putting questions to the complainant, the answers to which might clear away his suspicions, and having received answers which were not, in his opinion, satisfactory, he acted under a bonâ fide belief that he was legally justified in detaining what he suspected to be stolen property. The putting of questions to the complainant, not for the purpose of causing annoyance or from idle curiosity, but in order to clear up his suspicions, was an indication of good faith, as defined in s. 52 of the Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860). He was therefore protected by s. 79 of the Code. Even though the act of the accused in detaining the cloth might not have been strictly justifiable by law,—that is, even though there might not have been a complete basis of fact to justify a reasonable suspicion that the cloth was stolen property,—still the complainant had no right of private defence under s. 99 of the Code, as the accused was a public servant acting in good faith under colour of his office, and his act was not one which caused the apprehension of death or of grievous hurt. The complainant was not justified in refusing to allow the accused to inspect the cloth, in snatching it from his hands, and in scuffling with him. He was therefore legally arrested, under s. 54, cl. 5, of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882), for obstructing a police-officer while acting in the execution of his duty. W. N. 432*, overruled. Held, further, by the Full Bench, that, whereas in this case criminal force had been used by the accused to the complainant when the latter objected to the obstruction, which interfered with his right of way over a path, and this constituted the offence of wrongful restraint, of which offence the accused had been convicted, an order for the removal of the obstruction should be passed under s. 522 of the Criminal Procedure Code. ———— Ancient tanks—Negligence — Statutory powers — Liability for damage occasioned by overflow of tanks. The public duty of maintaining ancient tanks, and of constructing new ones, was originally undertaken by the Government of India, and upon the settlement of the country has, in many instances, devolved upon zamindars. Such zamindars have no power to do away with these tanks, in the maintenance of which large numbers of people are interested, but are charged under Indian law, by reason of their tenure, with the duty of preserving and repairing them. The rights and liabilities of such zamindars with regard to these tanks are analogous to those of persons or corporations on whom statutory powers have been conferred and statutory duties imposed. A zamindar, if the banks of any such tank in his possession are washed away by an extraordinary flood without negligence on his part, is not liable for damage occasioned thereby. 8. ——— Sale in execution of house in Mohalla—Wajib-ul-urz—Liability of auction-purchase—Right of zamindar to huq-i-chaharam. The zamindars of a certain mohalla claimed from the purchaser of a house situated in such Mohalla, which had been sold in execution of a decree, one-fourth of the sale-preceeds of such house, such purchaser being the holder of such decree. Such suit was based upon the terms of the wajib-ul-urz. That document stated, inter alia, that, when a house in such Mohalla was sold, a cess called chaharam was received by such zamindars "according to the understanding arrived at between the seller and the zamindars."

ZAMINDAR, RIGHTS OF—concld.

Held, that such zamindars were not entitled under the terms of the wajib-ul-urz to one-fourth of the sale-proceeds; that the decree-holder, because he happened to have become the auction-purchaser, could not be regarded as the "seller" and it was only the "seller" who was liable; that the terms of the wajib-ul-urz were applicable only to private and voluntary sales, and not to execution-sales; and that, under these circumstances, the suit must be dismissed. ZANZIBAR—concld.

1894, s. 6—Compensation—Incidents of land governed by the local law—Mahomedan law of compensation —Buildings erected by Government on the plaintiffs' land without authority. The lands of the plaintiffs in the island of Mombasa, part of the dominions of the Sultan of Zanzibar, were taken for a railway by the British Government, under s. 6 of the Indian Land Acquisition Act, 1894, which had been brought into force in Zanzibar by Order in Council. In a suit for compensation for the value of the lands so taken, and also of the buildings previously erected thereon by the said Government without authority: Held, that (i) as regards the lands, the plaintiffs are entitled under the said Act to the market value thereof at the date of service of notice under s. 6, including such actual speculative advance therein as had already taken place in consequence of the railway scheme, but excluding any future speculative advance from the like cause; (ii) that, as regards the buildings, English law applied, under the Order in Council of 1884 and the subsequent treaty of 1886. By that law, notwithstanding treaty rights of exterritoriality, the lex loci rei sitæ governs the incidents of land, that is, in this case, Mahomedan law, of which law a Zanzibar Judge has judicial cognizance; and (iii) that, by Mahomedan law, the houses did not become the plaintiffs' property: the plaintiffs are entitled to have them removed, and the value to them of the right to have them removed from lands which have ceased to be their property is the measure of the compensation due.
